Arrival of the Mails by the Arabia.

Interesting Correspondence and Details from Our Foreign Files.

The mails by the Royal Mail steamship Arabia reached this City at 5 o'clock P. M. yesterday. In addition to the very full telegraphic summary by her advices, which we published yesterday morning, we give below a variety of correspondence and details from our Foreign exchanges.

It appears from the Liverpool papers of Saturday, 30th ult., that Mr. TEN BROECK's American horse Starke (the winner of the Goodwood Stakes) was the victor in the race for the Bentinck Memorial Stakes, valued at one thousand sovereigns. Fifteen horses ran, and Prioress was third. Mr. TEN BROECK is reported to have won £25,000 by his horse beating the field for the Goodwood stakes. The Nursery stakes, also ran for on Friday, were won by Mr. TEN BROECK's two-year old Umpire, by Lecomte.

OUR ITALIAN CORRESPONDENCE.

State of Feeling Throughout Italy about the Peace—Movements of the French Troops and Austrian Prisoners—Dissatisfaction of Victor Emanuel—Unstable Nature of the Settlement of Villafranca—Incidents of the War—The French Officers and the Milanese Belles.

From Our Own Correspondent.

GENOA, Tuesday, July 19, 1859.

At Milan three days ago the opinion was general that at Rome, Florence and Venice some serious trouble was going to take place from the opposition to the Villafranca Treaty, and I hastened down here with a view of going to Rome and up through the States of the new Confederation as far as Venice, in order to render you an accurate account of the state of things de visu. But here I learn that, notwithstanding an immense irritation exists in those places against the new arrangement, the movement is likely to be confined to peaceable reclamations in the form of petitions, and I shall therefore retrace my steps to-morrow toward the Alps, returning to Paris by the Simplon route, through Switzerland and Baden-Baden.

It appears that at Paris and London the first impression in regard to the peace was favorable—an expression of opinion which caused almost as much surprise in Italy as the peace itself. They are surprised, too, to see published in Paris telegraphic dispatches from Milan and Turin, which represent the reception of their Majesties in those cities as enthusiastic. Nothing could, in fact, be further from the truth, as you will have learned from my letters from those places.

The most excitable rumors prevail in regard to public affairs, here as elsewhere. There can be no doubt that VICTOR EMANUEL is far from being satisfied with the result of the war. Not that he is not grateful to NAPOLEON for the immense sacrifice he has made in driving the Austrians out of Lombardy, but he had fixed his heart on more than this; he believed that the future interests of the country demanded more, and he had promised his people still better things. The King, it is said does not for a moment believe that the affairs of Italy are settled on a solid basis, and he has already given orders to commence organizing his army for future contingencies. With the aid of the Lombards, now his subjects, and an organized revolution in the States comprising the new Confederation, he hopes to be able to finish the work commenced by NAPOLEON.

To-day two manifestoes of the people of Tuscany energetically refusing to consent to the return of the Grand Duke, and signed by the principal citizens of Florence, were posted at the head-quarquarters of the National Guard in the Strada Nuova, in this city. They declare their intention to be peaceable and order-loving, but they none the the less ardently desire to be annexed to Piedmont and to proclaim for VICTOR EMANUEL. In Parma and Modena the same disposition prevails, and we hear of strange complications at Venice, but we see no travelers from that point, and must receive the reports with caution. At Leghorn the people burnt the journal containing the official announcement of the terms upon which peace had been signed, and some persons so far forgot what was due to decency as to pull down the name of NAPOLEON in certain places and replace it with that of ORSINI.

All this shows but too strongly the current of public opinion, and it is certainly true that I have not yet met one Italian who is satisfied with the treaty. There are those who throw the blame upon others than NAPOLEON, who see in the action of the foreign Powers an excuse for what he has done, and who profess at least to be grateful for the liberation of Lombardy; but these are the smallest number, and they coincide with the more violent in stigmatizing the peace as an unjust and unstable one, or, in other words, as an impossible one. This is the true state of things in Italy, no matter what they may say in Paris and London, and you can judge for yourself what is likely to be the result.

This state of things, however, is as well known to the two Emperors, it is to be presumed, as to any one else, and it is safe to predict that they will take in concert, or separately, some decisive action on the subject. Some coup d'état is probably in course of preparation, as astounding and as unexpected as that of Villafranca.

But there is another circumstance which I confess I do not understand. From Milan to Genoa we had with us a hundred Austrian prisoners, on their way to Algiers, to work on the French fortifications. If there is any probability that the final details of the treaty are soon to be concluded, where is the necessity of going to the expense of conveying these men to such a long distance, and then bringing them directly back again? The French might hope, certainly, to retain them in Algeria as colonists, but they are still soldiers in the Austrian army, and ought to return to their ranks to serve their time out, and it will be curious, indeed, if Austria will relinquish her right upon them.

Genoa differs in its political sentiments from all other Piedmontese towns. It clings to its ancient republican souvenirs, and has but little political sympathy, either with VICTOR EMANUEL or the sovereignty of Sardinia. For this reason the soldiers are far from meeting the same reception here as in other Italian towns, and although they do not complain—a French soldier never complains of anything—they cannot fail to mark the difference. A wounded officer who came with me from Milan to Genoa was one of the first three French officers who rode into Milan after the battle of Magenta. They were charged with making preparations for the arrival of the Etat-Major, and as they were in a hurry, and knew they would be interrupted in the streets if they rode slowly, they galloped through the city to the hotel that had been indicated to them. They had scarcely entered the house, however, when they were surrounded by elegant ladies, who protested that the officers were committing an outrage upon their gratitude and their sense of hospitality in supposing they would allow them to stop at a hotel. They were carried off to private houses, and my companion had the good fortune to fall into the hands of a rich young widow. He remained at her house till the battle of Melagnano, was there wounded, and was carried to her house to be treated. The captain is a handsome fellow, and the reader will have no trouble in divining the result. All sorts of eternal vows were made, and the captain only returns to France on leave of absence. One of the other officers fell into a family where there was a daughter with a fortune of $30,000—a handsome marriage portion in this country—who fell violently in love with him, and was ready to join her fortune to his; but, for a wonder, the young man remained faithful to a less brilliant affection in France, and left the fair young Milanese in despair. The husbands and beaux of Milan are in a rage of jealousy; but what can they do? Are not the French their liberators?

The port of Genoa now contains about 250 transport ships lying snugly together in squares and streets, in the little harbor, awaiting orders. The French have here an immense amount of provisions; the sacks of wheat and flour seem to be numbered by the million, and they continue to transport them toward the camp this side the Mincio. There is but little travel, and, with the exception of officers, the hotels see but few travelers.

We came again through the battle-field of Magenta, and found it more trampled over and beaten down by visitors than it was by the hasty passage of the soldiers the day of the battle. French officers call Magenta an immense skirmish, Solferino a grand battle. MALAKOFF.

OUR LONDON CORRESPONDENCE.

Napoleon III. and the English Government—The Aristocratic Party in England Feeding English Distrust of Napoleon—Lord Elcho's Motion Against a Congress—Town Empty—Meyerbeer's New Opera.

LONDON, Monday, July 25, 1859.

"Congress or no Congress"—that is the question which engages just now the minds of all politicians here. NAPOLEON III. is urgent that we should enter into the design, and asks how he can be expected to believe in the continuance of cordial relations on our part, if he is daily assailed by our Press and held at a distrustful distance by our Government? Afraid to enter rashly into the proposed European Conference, the leading members of the Cabinet have tried to propitiate their exigeant ally by denouncing the newspapers for their plain speaking about the Emperor; and there has been during the last few days an active correspondence going on by telegraph between the two Governments as to the possibility of coming to some agreement for a basis on which a Congress regarding Italy may be convened. Lord PALMERSTON and Lord JOHN RUSSELL are conscious that we are not prepared for the consequences of a quarrel with France, which, however it might end, would entail upon us in the first instance fearful loss and damage. They would, therefore, temporize, and try to make better terms for Italy than she is likely to get if the two Emperors are left to work out for themselves the ideas interchanged at Villafranca. But a majority of the Cabinet, and, what is far more important, a majority of both Houses of Parliament, are decidedly and doggedly opposed to our being drawn, under any pretence, into diplomatic union with France. The Court and the Tories, together with the Stafford-house Whigs,—the Greys, the Grosvenors and the Gowers in all their generations and family ramifications,—hate Bonapartism, and rejoice at the favor into which it has recently fallen at home and abroad. Their hope is in a Bourbonic restoration; and they resolved to sever all ties of intimacy with the Imperial parvenu, whom they detest as an intruder far more than as a despot. Lord ELCHO, the heir to a Scotch Earldom, and a thorough-going Tory at heart, though he affects a sort of Peelism, has given notice of a resolution for Monday next, which, if adopted by the House of Commons would disable Government from entering the proposed Congress upon any terms. There cannot be a doubt that if the House were to obey its genuine instincts it would pass this prohibitory resolution. Most of the discontented Radicals would vote for it. Mr. BRIGHT, Mr. HORSMAN, Mr ROEBUCK, Mr. LINDSAY, Lord FORMOY, would, I have reason to believe, support Lord ELCHO, not for the reasons he is likely to assign for its introduction, but as a means of showing their want of confidence in the administration. Of the forty Irish Liberals, ministers would not be able to poll twenty, if so many; and where they are to get enough to make up for the defalcations, it is not easy to conjecture. All will depend, however, on the amount of pressure put on by the Carlton Club to induce its idle men to return to town, in order to vote once more this session. The Government people either do not believe in the possibility of their being beaten, or conceal their apprehensions admirably; for they quite pooh-pooh the notion of Lord ELCHO's success, and talk as if they did not believe he would press his motion after all. They fancy, too, that an unendurable impression will be made on the minds of waverers by the exposition of the actual state of affairs promised by Lord JOHN RUSSELL on Thursday next. Meanwhile a curious fact has come to my knowledge within the last few hours. A member of the Commons, who is about to be made a Peer, has arranged to vacate his seat next week, but not until after the threatened resolution against a Congress has been disposed of. One consideration may indeed out-weigh all others, should it be openly appealed to, and that is the real or supposed danger of precipitating a rupture with LOUIS NAPOLEON. Nothing could be more derogatory to the dignity of England than to assign such a reason for not pursuing a line of policy otherwise approved of by his Parliament and people, and nothing would in point of prudence warrant the contrary.

The town is getting empty very fast. The Court is at Osborne, and the unusual heat of the weather has sent the Westenders to their country houses earlier than usual. To-night—that is about six weeks too late—MYERBEER's new opera is to be produced at Covent Garden, under the title of "Dinorah." Those who have heard the music sung by Madame MIOLAN CARVALHO, as I have, feel no doubt as to what its reception ought to be. But Mr. Bull is a creature not readily caught by peculiar and intricate music; and, recollecting all the excellent things that have failed here, but which succeeded in Paris and Milan, I do not undertake to prophesy as to the event. MIOLAN is a very little woman, with a very fine and marvelously disciplined voice, brilliant and subtle to a degree in execution, but not possessing any great power or volume. It is MEYERBEER'S own fault that it was not brought out before. He would insist upon rehearsal after rehearsal, regardless of audiences, being on the wane. But it will certainly be perfect in representation if perfection there is ever to be.

THE ENGLISH PRESS ON THE DISARMAMENT OF FRANCE.

From the Daily News, July 29.

The French Government announces its purpose to replace its army and navy upon a peace footing. The execution of this measure would be the most valuable pledge that could be given for the peace of the world. It is true that the measure exists at present only in intention; true also that we do not know the extent of the reductions contemplated; and true, moreover that whatever their extent they must still leave France a mighty neighbor. But let us moderate our desires to what is possible, nor throw away a great opportunity by unreasonableness. This diminution of immense armaments is spontaneously resolved on before the armistice is a month old, and while the peace exists only in its preliminaries. It is as the sign and earnest of a pacific disposition that the worth of the announcement ought to be estimated. It will be accepted here here with candor, not indeed as a reason for foregoing the demand for those reforms in our belligerent services of which we have been made to feel the need so painfully, nor for acquiescing in a return to a state of costly inefficiency, but as a reason for dismissing the lessons of dark distrust which have of late been inculcated as the perfection of political wisdom. Credulity may betray, but confidence is the life of civilization. We are aware that in some quarters this declaration of an intention to disarm will be received as certain evidence that the plot against England has become darker and deeper. The apocalyptic interpreter would part with life sooner than give up his "little horn;" the prophets will not quietly be baulked of their promised invasion; the psychologists will insist on the soundness of their a priori theory of the character of LOUIS NAPOLEON; but men of the world will try and make the best of their age and of its chief actors, nor let excessive caution consume the marrow of their life. We have too much lost ground to recover to permit us to abandon the reforms we have prosecuted in our naval and military administration; but we do not aim at—the nation would deprecate—any great extension of our actual forces. What is, above all things, wanted, is a means of developing, with a rapidity corresponding to the progress of the times, that reserve of national force of the greatness of which we have so often given proof. The pursuit of improvements of this kind, such, for instance, as the institution of a system of manning the navy that should procure for us the advantage which the French derive from their recrutement and inscription maritime, cannot possibly be misconstrued in France. The pacific character of our policy is too plainly traced by our commercial interests, and by the growing disapprobation of war as a means of promoting national objects, to permit these merely defensive precautions to become temptations to aggression. It is the weakness of the professional services, in appearance, throwing the country upon itself for its own protection, which has lately done so much to disquiet the public mind here; and next to the removal of positive causes of misunderstanding between the two countries, nothing would contribute so much to the maintenance of peace as the restoration of confidence in our means of defence.

From the Times, July 29.

The Moniteur, of yesterday, contains the most welcome announcement that could come to English ears from a foreign land. The French Emperor has issued his orders to disarm. With the least possible delay the Army and Navy of France are to be restored to their peace establishment. The people of England reading these glad tidings will take a deep breath, such as a man takes when a crisis of apprehension is past; they will congratulate each other that the peril they dreaded has drifted away, and that they may turn back to peaceful pursuits, and to the pleasant paths of human existence. It was not in panic fear, but in grave and sad disquietude, that we in this island regarded that heavy cloud, so charged with electricity, which loomed upon the near horizon. We felt that it must burst or must disperse and if it burst we had small choice in our conjectures as to where only the bolt must fall. Frankly, then, we acknowledge in this salutary determination of our neighbor and ally a proof of loyal adherence to the friendship which has united these two great nations, and gladly recognize in it a pledge of future peace to Europe. Undoubtedly, the resolution has been taken solely from consideration for the true interests of France. She has had her season of new glories, and the Emperor has gained his first crown of laurels. It is moderate and it is wise to stop while the appetite is still unsated. Rien épuiser is a maxim of personal economy, which is true also in public and national concerns. NAPOLEON III. has done, perhaps, less than he might once have intended to do in Italy, but he has done all that he has chosen to attempt. We will not now stop to discuss the shortcomings or to anticipate what may be the ultimate result of the new system that must be there established. Having, however, determined to close this chapter of his history, the Emperor has most wisely consulted the financial exigencies and the material advantage of his kingdom in staying the heavy expenditure of men and money, and in giving France, as we hope, a long repose from the unprofitable toil of war. We have said upon former occasions that for a war to be popular in France it must be short, and it must be successful. The war which has just closed has fulfilled both these conditions. We recognize in this disarmament the sagacity of the Emperor in gauging the temper of his people, and, for our own part, we rejoice that we may now return to security and peace. We shall, of course, in due time follow the example of our neighbor. We are not, however, much behind him in the completeness of our peace establishment. There are many specks of rust yet to be rubbed away, and many mouldering works yet to be repaired. But these are merely the ordinary matters of defence. Having no idea of aggression, and being too careless of remote possibilities, we have let many things run into disrepair. The careful householder paints and papers periodically, and we have been stimulated by recent events to survey our premises and make good dilapidations. Happily, there is now no further need that this should be done in haste. We have handed the consideration of these matters over to a Commission, which is about to decide what is the permanent defensive establishment which these islands require in time of peace, as the basis whence upon an emergency a full war establishment might be quickly built up. By the report of that Commission we shall be guided, and we congratulate ourselves and our readers that we may hereafter deal with these questions dispassionately as points of mere engineering or strategic science, and without fear that the fortifications which England, like all other Powers, must necessarily keep up, are in danger of being at an early day tested by an enemy.

THE PEACE CONGRESS AT ZURICH.

From the Daily News, July 29.

The clear and full statements made by Lord JOHN RUSSELL and Lord PALMERSTON are most welcome additions to the general knowledge of the course of European diplomacy at the present moment. We may claim for the English press that it has not misled the public on any of the points touched by the Premier and Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs; but the rumors and allegations of the foreign journals had involved the affairs of Italy in its inextricable confusion. The speeches made last night show us austria moody and sullen, more determined even than before the war to resist every thing like an appeal to reason, to right, to the future; and her trusty friends, the members of our late Administration, confirming her in that attitude. Austria will have no Congress, because at former Congresses those terrible things, ideas, have been sometimes known to prevail. Nobody asks her to enter a Congress to be talked into giving up Venice. Her surrender of territory is defined in the peace—that being the only thing the two Emperors had authority to settle. But her pretentions to disturb Italy by destroying the inconvenient freedom of her neighbors, are matters of which any European Power is entitled to take cognizance. She dreads their discussion, and she may hinder it. It is quite probable that she may prevent the holding of a Congress, but she thereby adds nothing to her own rights, nor does she diminish our right to protest against her illegal interventions.

Lord JOHN RUSSELL's speech shows that Ministers have no intention of departing from the strict neutrality which they have hitherto observed. The peace will be made, as is proper, witnout England; but the work which lies beyond the peace—the work to which neither France nor Austria are competent, whether separately or combined, will not be shunned by England if it should appear hereafter that our influence can be usefully exerted to promote the peace of Europe and the interests of freedom. There is nothing like impatience or a desire to meddle in the attitude of the English Government. When it cannot participate with honor it can abstain with dignity. For the present it will not interfere at all; it will await the result of the negotiations of Zurich, and examine the treaty to be signed there. Again, it will not deal with the affairs of Italy in a Congress until Austria has become a party to their discussion. And lastly, it will have nothing to do with any attempt to settle Italy of which the condition is not independent States, either to form confederations or to receive back bad governors, is to be a condition. It will thus be seen that it is quite possible that there may be no Congress at all; and that, even if one should be held, we may take no part in it. But most reflecting people, we think, will agree that the right rule for our guidance is that which the Government has laid down, and that any such rule as that which Lord ELCHO is attempting to substitute for it would be an abdication of the rights and duties of England. Lord JOHN RUSSELL well said: "It would never do for the Ministers of the Crown of Great Britain, who have taken a part in every great Conference in Europe since 1815; it would never become us now suddenly, and without any reason, to withdraw from any such meeting, any such assembly of the different powers of Europe, if there is any chance that the situation of Italy may be improved, peace confirmed, and the independence of Italy secured."

The speeches of Lord PALMERSTON and Mr. GLADSTONE, vigorous, elevated, statesmanlike, will convince the detractors of England, whether at home or abroad, that whatever disadvantages we suffered under the late Government, we have now a foreign policy, wise, pacific, free, and eminently national.

FRANCE.

The Times correspondent writes from Marseilles July 24:

"One of the local papers states that at the reception of the Diplomatic Body the Emperor treated Lord COWLEY with coolness, (froideur.) and that his Lordship left with an anxious countenance, which was very much remarked by all his colleagues. If this statement be true you have already been informed of it from Paris; if it be false, it is another instance of the double-faced policy adopted by the French Government, showing how the desire for peace is professed in Paris, while the most discreditable and vulgar means are resorted to in the provinces to excite the hatred of the lower classes against England, and to render a new war popular; for, of course, that statement would not have been suffered to appear in print without the sanction and instigation of the Prefecture—that is to say, the Government. Last evening the overture to 'Charles VI.' was played at one of the concert-rooms most frequnted by working-men. I should mention that in order to prevent competition with the theatres, it is forbidden to sing any portion of the operas or plays at the concert-room. But when the orchestra played in the overture the air of the celebrated refrain I am assured by the persons present, Englishmen as well as Frenchmen, that the audience restored the original version, and sang 'Guerre aux Anglais,' instead of the milder authorized form of 'Guerre aux Tyrans.' The overture was encored, and the persons most conspicuous in this patriotic movement were individuals disguised in plain clothes. If this were the spontaneous expression of ill-will on the part of the Marseillais towards England it would not be worth notice, but it is the deliberate and premeditated act of the Government, through its agent, the Prefect, to excite the people to vociferate "Guerre aux Anglais," and that in a town which is largely indebted for its prosperity to English trade and English capital. Whether the Emperor has decided upon changing his policy towards England, the next few weeks will probably determine; but that such is his intention is the belief of the population generally.

The Continental Press on the Peace.

(Translated for the New-York Times.)

THE GERMAN PRESS.

The Gazette de Cologne, (Prussian,) in remarking on the Emperor's speech to the French Councils, sees in it a menace addressed to the neutral Powers. Its correspondent is full of anxiety and alarm about Prussia and England.

La Gazette des Postes, (Franco-German,) of Frankfort, still dreams of invasions and conquests. This journal delights in describing the sentiments of anger and resentment which it takes pleasure in supposing the different Powers of Europe feel, and does not cease to warn England, among the rest, to be on her guard. "England," it says, "has forsaken all her allies, injured all her friends; by a just recompense she will find herself deserted in the moment of danger, and this moment comes nearer and nearer; she even now has a presentiment of it."

L'Ost Deutsche Post (Austrian) analyses the Imperial address, and follows with some comments dictated more by national amour propre than by truth.

"The discourses addressed by NAPOLEON III. to the great corps d'état ought to be regarded as the proclamation to the French people to which every one should give heed. This speech is simple, straightforward and sincere. NAPOLEON III. acknowledged, without evasion, having begun the war against the wish of Europe and not having conformed to all the conditions of his programme. If we sum up this discourse we shall see that NAPOLEON confesses frankly that he was in error when he hoped to be able to localize the war. All Frenchmen to whom the interests of their country are dearer than those of a blind passion will say with the Emperor that to conquer the quadrilateral it would have been necessary to risk that which they could have put in peril only for the safety of their own country. It is possible that an independent Italy might be favorable to France, but assuredly the independence of Piedmont would not be for the advantage of its powerful neighbor. Suppose VICTOR EMANUEL master of Venice, of the Legations of the Duchies, France would have poured out so much blood only to give herself a new and a brave enemy, who fearing no longer the Cabinet of Vienna, would have taken pains to make an alliance with it. The history of the House of Savoy proves this."

The Weser-Zeitung (Prussian) recapitulates in this manner the feelings which display themselves through the whole empire: "The conclusion of the Peace has produced extreme surprise, and the manifesto of the Emperor to the army and to his people has aroused a feeling of great hostility towards Prussia. There is hardly a fortnight that the Austrian Press does not confound itself in protestations of friendship towards Prussia and her sovereign, and in the meantime it overwhelms us with invectives. The people, and above all the army, let their exasperation against us escape thus: 'We have made peace, but we will not put our sword in the scabbard, we will not march against Prussia; Silesia will compensate us for Lombardy.' That is the language which can be heard everywhere.

The Gazette of Elberfeld (Prussian) publishes an elaborate article, entitled "Who is Wrong?—Who is Right?" It treats of the two manifestos—that of the Emperor NAPOLEON, and that of the Emperor FRANCIS JOSEPH—the one declaring that he has put an end to the war because Europe threatened him, and the other affirming that he has made peace because he was abandoned by his allies.

"It follows from all this," says the Gazette, "that the French Emperor has judged the situation better than the Austrian Emperor. The reasons which have brought the first to make peace were precisely those which ought to have determined the Austrian Emperor to continue the war."

The Austrian Gazette does not think the danger so great, and contents itself with saying, with sufficient abruptness, to Prussia, that her manœuvres will not succeed; that she will never be received by Germany as its head, and that the preponderance of Austria will come out victorious from the contest.

"Prussia can never subdue Germany, morally or materially—morally, because the German Governments are too circumspect for a foreign propaganda to have any chance with them; materially, because Central Germany, even abandoned by Austria, will be a match for Prussia in the contest. Not only will Austria remain in the German Confederation, but she will always be the leader in it, thanks to the simple fact that she is the strongest of German Powers." The same journal no longer thinks an Italian Confederation impossible. "Peace," says the Gazette, "is doubtless hampered with many difficulties; but we have full faith that they will all be smoothed away. Nothing is perfect in the works of man; and society exists only in virtue of perpetual compromises. We are not always able to exterminate our adversaries as we might wish to do. You may ravage the world with fire and sword, if you please, to secure the predominance of an exclusive principle; but you will, after all, be forced to end with a compromise at last. Why is it that history shudders at the names of TAGNEMADA and ROBESPIERRE? It is because neither Jacobinism nor the Inquisition were willing to compromise. Is the Peace of Villafranca the first rotten peace of the world? The conquered has always thought he gave too much—the conqueror that he received too little. The treaties of 1815 satisfied nobody, but they lasted through forty-four years. Every peace is wholesome when the contracting parties act with loyalty. Every peace is rotten when, on one side or the other, it is concluded with the intention of breaking it as soon as possible.

THE ITALIAN PRESS.

The Monitore Toscano comments on the Emperor NAPOLEON'S discourse to the great corps d'etat. It begins in this manner:

"The peace, unforeseen, unexpected and not wished for, seemed at first to have destroyed all the benefits which the war promised us; but little by little this thought has disappeared, and it is seen that the peace has only come to carry on the object of the war. What was in fact the object of the war? to consolidate the Italian nationality; and NAPOLEON III. now announces to the world in his discourse to the State bodies of France, 'that the idea of Italian nationality is henceforth accepted by all the sovereigns of the Peninsula.' These words reveal a great and new order of things. Henceforth, everything hostile to Italian nationality becomes impossible. Submission to Austria is impossible—the Governments which served or sought to serve Austria, are impossible. FRANCIS V., of Modena; and LEOPOLD II., of Tuscany are impossible; still more impossible is FERDINAND, son of LEOPOLD, so Austrian at heart that he rushed to Solferino to fight against the Italian armies. Henceforth the bases of the peace rest on these words: 'Italian Nationality.' All that is contrary to these words has passed away forever."

Il Monitore, of Florence, speaks in the same strain. This journal says, NAPOLEON III. was right when he said, in ending his speech, that "he had not abandoned the cause which he wished to serve." He has changed the means to the end, not the end itself. He wished and he still wishes to ransom and insure the nationality of Italy. He began the work in war; he will end it in peace. Motives, independent of his own, will have made him change his road; but they have not made him recoil. He will reach his end We have no reason for doubting either his courage or his power.

The Opinione of Turin begins to hold the same language. "If the Emperor NAPOLEON," says the Sardinian journal, "has yielded before the peril of a general conflagration dangerous to the interests o France; if his work remains incomplete, we have yet full faith that he will fulfill it thoroughly. It is a question of time merely. The treaties of 1815 at least are gone forever. The patriotism, energy and good faith of Italy must now carry on the good work so well begun."

THE SPANISH PRESS.

The España, of Madrid, pronounces in these terms on the peace of Villafranca:

"NAPOLEON'S prudent conduct is more glorious for him than all the victories gained in Lombardy. In making peace he has only had in view the safety of Europe, which was about to be destroyed by a terrible conflagration. This prudent conduct, noble, elevated, deserves all praise. He did not wish to unloose revolution in order to triumph over his enemies. Any glory, however great, any advantageous result, whatever it might be to France, whatever it might be to Europe, could not have lessened this dreadful responsibility. Revolution, when it comes of itself, is a great calamity; when it is provoked it is the greatest of crimes.—the crime against humanity. (lèse humanité.) The moderation of the Emperor NAPOLEON has saved France and Europe."

OUR PANAMA CORRESPONDENCE.

The Grave-Digging Excitement at Chiriqui—The Collins Steamers—Business of the Panama Railroad, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PANAMA, Tuesday, Aug. 2, 1859.

The grave-digging excitement has suffered no diminution since my last, although there have been no new arrivals from Chiriqui. Natives and foreigners continue to flock to the old Indian country in such numbers that our streets are getting to be rather bare of "gentlemen of leisure." During the last week three schooners, with 150 men, have left, and three more vessels are up for passengers, and will be full. From Bocas del Toro, on the Atlantic, I hear that pretty much the whole town has pulled up stakes and crossed over to Chiriqui. There must be at least two housand persons on the spot. The Josefa, which sailed from here a fortnight ago, with the first load of adventurers, is expected back within eight or ten days, and then I shall no doubt be enabled to send you some interesting information in regard to this curious gold discovery.

Mr. POWER, of the Star here, who has studied with great care the history of the Isthmus and its past and present population, remarks in the course of an interesting article on the discoveries at Chiriqui:

"Whether the 'huacas' from which the golden ornaments now being extracted, were the burial places of the people who, at the time of the discovery of America inhabited the country, it is extremely difficult to say. The fact of golden eagles, such as those spoken of by COLUMBUS, being found in great numbers, would almost lead to the conclusion that they were of the same race, for it is not probable that those people, whose respect for their dead is mentioned by all early Spanish historians, would have plundered the graves of any previous tribe; and the fact of many images in the form of frogs or toads having also been found, not only in gold but also in their earthenware utensils would strengthen the idea, because the worship of lower animals was not uncommon, and an old writer tells us expressly that 'they held the toad' to be, as they said, 'the lord of the waters,' and therefore they were very compassionate with it, and dreaded by any accident to kill a toad, though, as has been found the case with other Isthmians, they were ready in times of difficulty to compel a favorable hearing from the pretended deities; for they were known to keep their toads with great care under an earthen vessel, and to whip them with little switches when there was a scarcity of provisions or a dearth of rain. It is remarkable that both in the graves of the Peruvians and in the Indian sepulchres in Nicaragua figures of toads have been frequently found, which fact points to some similarity of religion at least among a people spread over so vast an extent of country. On the other hand there are not wanting persons who, having investigated the subject, assign to these graves an antiquity as great as the picture-written memorials of COPAN and PALENQUE; but as yet we have not seen among the images or embossed work received here any specimens that bear resemblance to the drawings of STEPHENS or KINGSBOROUGH near Caldera, in Chiriqui, exists a large block of stone, engraved with curious hieroglyphics, and it is said that in the forests are to be found ruins and sculptures similar to those of Central America. These, doubtless, were the work of the mysterious people who left such wonderful traces of their presence throughout the American continent; but that the 'huacas' in which the golden images are found, are remains of the same race, appears to us to want confirmation.

One thing is certain—whoever the people were, the gold from which the ornaments they used was made was produced in the country in which they lived, and evidently in great abundance, the richest localities being according to all accounts the Atlantic slope of the Veraguas mountains, and probably the district watered by the rivers that flow from the same range into the Pacific between the entrance of the David River and the Gulf of Dulce. The accounts of the rich mines of Tisengal and La Estrella, of Conception, Santa Fé, Trinidad, and Belen, are still traditionary in the country, and it can scarcely be doubted that the excitement caused by the discoveries in the huacas will draw a class of intelligent and enterprising miners to the country, who will not rest content with such slight explorations, but search for and discover the long hidden sources from which the Indians derived their supply."

I do not believe, with Mr. POWER, that there are any "long-hidden sources" from which the Indians procured gold in "great abundance." The gold found in these "huacas" is probably the accumulation of many hundreds of years, and was doubtlessly found in small particles and scales, in no greater abundance than it is now found in Choco and Antioquia, and indeed in almost every part of New-Granada. It is not likely gold will ever be discovered in this country in sufficient quantities to pay such wages as are calculated upon by the gold-diggers of the present day. The fact that the old Spaniards found large quantities of gold in their first settlement of the country, is no proof of its great abundance—for a great part of it was robbed from the chiefs who had been a long time accumulating it, and a still greater portion was undoubtedly robbed from these same Indian "huacas."

The announcement that the Panama Railroad Company has bought the magnificent ships of the Collins line, and intends to run them in connection with the fast and splendid ships of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, has created quite a sensation in our generally quiet community. In October, the era of nine and twelve days' passages from New-York to Aspinwall, and twenty-five days to California, will be ended. Nineteen days will suffice, with these ships, for the whole route; and this will make the route from New-York to San Francisco two days shorter than any other route, and two days shorter than any other route can be made, without the expenditure of more millions than any new Company will venture to invest in the business. To say that with these arrangements the United States mails must pass this Isthmus, would be superfluous; for the merchants and business men on both oceans will have the mails by the shortest and most reliable route.

In glancing over the books of the Panama Railroad Company, I gleaned a few statistics of their business for the first six months of the present year, from which it appears it is largely on the increase. From Jan. 1 to July 1, 1859, the number of passengers over the road amounted to 20,215, being 3,149 more than in the corresponding six months of 1858. Gold, $23,207,841 84; silver, $5,549,084; jewelry, $257,418 31, United States mails, 439,176 pounds; British mails, 22, 766; freight, 15,000 tons.

Last week eight or ten prisoners escaped from the jail here, the guards having been bribed, it is said, by TOM EDWARDS, a notorious character on this coast, from New-York, who wished to free two Costa Ricans, who were imprisoned for robbing Madame MAYER of a large lot of jewelry, and of whom TOM is charged with having been the accomplice.

The United States sloop-of-war St. Marys sailed from Panama for Realejo on the 28th July to relieve the Cyane. The Vandalia is still in the Bay. The Merrimac and Saranac are on the South coast. The Roanoke and St. Louis in Aspinwall. The Jamestown and Preble are at San Juan del Norte.

The Opposition Steamers—The Congressional Election in Oregon—Politics in California—Mining News—Miscellaneous.

From Our Own Correspondent.

SAN FRANCISCO Wednesday, July 20, 1859.

Two steamers leave our port to-day for Panama—the Golden Age, of the mail line, and the Uncle Sam, of the opposition. Neither of them carry a full complement of passengers, or anything like it, notwithstanding that the fare is ridiculously low. The Uncle Sam is expected to connect with the North Star at Panama, and her passengers will probably reach New-York several days after those by the mail steamer. By the way, if any passengers left New-York by the North Star on her first trip to Aspinwall, they must have been kept over a fortnight on the Isthmus, for no opposition steamer from Panama is expected here before the 30th inst.

Among the passengers who leave us to-day, is Mr. JOHN T. HOWARD, of your City, of the former house of HOWARD & SON. Mr. H. has been here for some months looking after valuable interests in connection with Col. FREMONT'S Mariposa estates—the prospects o which are looking up very brightly since the recent settlement of differences between the several parties in interest. COLLINS, the Irish actor, and Miss FANNY MORANT, also start for New York to-day. The latter—although she has never had an opportunity to appear in this State in the style of pieces best adapted to her abilities—leaves a very favorable impression upon those who have witnessed her performances. It is understood that she is under engagement with Mr. CO

ARRIVAL OF THE NORTH STAR.

INTERESTING FROM NEW-GRANADA.

REVOLUTION IN CARTHAGENA.

THE CHIRIQUI GOLD DISCOVERIES.

Later from California and Oregon.

The Vanderbilt steamship North Star, Capt. JOHNS, arrived yesterday morning from Aspinwall, having left that place on the 3d inst.

The steamship North Star left New-York July 20, and reached Aspinwall on the 28th—three days and six hours in advance of the Star of the West.

By this arrival we have Panama papers to the 2d inst. The local news is of no importance.

The U. S. sloop-of-war St. Marys sailed from Panama on the 28th of July for Realejo.

The Chiriqui gold discoveries form the topic of discussion in the Panama papers. The schooner Carolina had sailed for the region with fifty passengers on board, and another vessel was shortly to leave.

The Panama Star and Herald says:

"Letters received in this city from David, dated July 14, state that the people from all directions continue to flock to the gold diggings, and that the yield of gold obtained from the 'huacas' continues undiminished. The Prefect of the department informs the Governor that the elections (for Procurado, &c.) did not take place on the day appointed, as no electors appeared at the poll, all being too busily engaged in the grave diggings."

By the West Indian mail, intelligence had been received of a revolutionary movement at Carthagena. The liberal party, on the 23d of July, pronounced against the authorities in consequence of the new law of election. A party of them on the night of the 25th of June, attacked the jail and captured the guard. From thence they proceeded to the residence of Señor JUAN JOSE NIETO, ex-Governor, and induced him to accept the provisional rule of the State. Señor CALVO, the actual Governor, was in the interior at the time, and had not returned.

Señor NIETO had issued a proclamation under date of July 26, calling a public meeting of the citizens on that day.

The advices from the Southern Coast are no later than those received by the Northern Light.

The English are making great exertions to free the steamer Paramatta, now lying on the reef, sixty miles from St. Thomas. They have thrown overboard almost the entire cargo, and a number of divers are engaged in blowing up the coral rock around and about her.

We receive by the North Star San Francisco advices to the 20th ult.,—five days later than previous advices by the Overland Mail.

We are indebted to the Express Companies of FREEMAN & Co. and WELLS, FARGO & Co. for late papers.

NEW-GRANADA.

News from Bogota—Revolution in Carthagena.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PANAMA, Tuesday, Aug. 2, 1859.

We have dates from Bogota to the 13th July, but there was in that capital nothing new of interest.

On the 25th July, while the British steamer Trent lay in the port of Carthagena, Mr. BERNAL, the British Consul, who was dining on board, received news that a "revolution" had broken out in the city, and on proceeding on shore found that a few persons, headed by JUAN JOSA NIETO, calling themselves Liberals, had deposed the State authorities and taken possession of the Government. There was no fighting or opposition. NIETO's party, after parading the streets for a while, marched to the quarters of the armed police and demanded their weapons, which they delivered over at once. The next day NIETO issued the following proclamation:

The Provisional Government to the Inhabitants of Carthagena:

CITIZENS: The time has arrived, in this State, to substitute a new order of things for that which now exists, so contrary to the federal system the people have adopted. Above all, let us not be alarmed, for great enterprises are never accomplished by crime; you may rest assured the rights of all shall be respected, and make these promises because my antecedents give me the right to be believed.

After the happy result we have obtained, it only remains for the sovereign and united people to convoke a meeting for the day, at 12 o'clock, at the Consistorial, to take such measures as our situation may require. JUAN JOSE NIETO.

CARTHAGENA, July 26, 1859.

Capt. LEWIS, of the British steamer Thames, who gives me the foregoing information, says the city when he left on the 26th, bore its usual quiet appearance, with the exception that a few armed men were parading the streets, and a couple of old field-pieces had been planted on the Plaza. A report was prevalent that the Revolutionists had seized the Bogota mail, but had let it pass, after taking $8,000 Government money from it.

It is quite true that a good deal of dissatisfaction exists among the people, in consequence of the late centralizing measures of President OSPINA and his Congress, or at least these are made the pretexts for opposition; but I doubt very much if a successful revolution can be gotten up against him. The revolutionists of Carthagena counted upon the support of Gen. MORGUERA, Governor of the State of Cauca, but I doubt much if they get it.

The St. Mary's has gone to Realejo; the Vandalia is still in port; the Merrimac is at Callao, and the Saranac daily expected at Panama. The Roanoke and St. Louis are at Aspinwall. The Jamestown and Preble at San Juan del Norte, and the Cyane at San Juan del Sur.

The gold excitement about the "grave diggings" still continues, although we have had no animals from Chiriqui the past fortnight. It is calculated that there must be 2 000 persons on the spot. About 150 had gone from Panama. F. W. R.

OUR ASPINWALL CORRESPONDENCE.

ASPINWALL, N. G., Wednesday, Aug. 3, 1859.

Believing that the opposition steamer North Star would be the first to land their passengers at the wharf in New-York, I neglected to write by the Moses Taylor.

The Isthmus, as usual, affords very little news of vital importance, or of interest to the general reader. We have, however, the startling announcement that a revolution has broken out among the live "greasers" of Carthagena.

There is some little excitement still in regard to the "Huacas" of the dead Indians of Chiriqui, yet the spasms which afflicted the inhabitants at the first are growing "beautifully less" day by day, and the end will be brass and ashes—if we may judge by the wind.

The British are trying their utmost to extricate their steamer, the Paramatta, from the reef. Divers are engaged blowing up the coral around her, and if they do not blow her up with it they may float her again. The cargo is almost completely a loss; as they relieve her of it they throw it over at San Juan; they continue to doubt the opening of the "Transit de Nicaragua," and to denounce both the Commodores and the Administration for suffering it to remain so long closed and neglected. The American citizens there who have interests in the country, despair of ever hearing of the knotted imbroglio being severed and settled.

The Jamestown is still cruising off the harbor for filibusters; considerable sickness is reported to be on board. The English gunboat Rattler is likewise on the qui vive for the "gray-eyed man of destiny."

The Roanoke and St. Louis are in this harbor, and with quite a number of Isthmus-fever cases on board, this being one out of the fifty-two weeks of rainy weather here, and when the malaria has free play, and is no respecter of persons, and falling alike indifferently upon the just and the unjust, like our torrents of rain.

The Uncle Sam, with four hundred passengers, has arrived at Panama. They will embark again on board of the North Star, for New-York, this evening, and will most likely, should no accident prevent, reach the Empire City some days ahead of the Star of the West, the Mail boat.

THE CHIRIQUI GOLD DISCOVERIES.

A letter received by the Panama Star from CARLOS WROENER, dated June 24, though rather out of date, contains a few items worth transcribing:

"An old half-caste Indian, who lives in Dolega (ROBERTO DELSI, whom you probably know,) and who has been in the habit of digging up Indian graves for the sake of the earthernware and piedras de moler generally found therein, took it into his head to dig a little deeper, which brought him to the real grave where the body is deposited in a coffin of rudely fixed stones, and there he found the skeleton of the deceased, together with a beautifully worked 'bat' in gold. Since then it has been ascertained that every huaca contains gold images in more or less number, the earthernware and other articles having been buried only half way down, and this explains why up to the present time so few of the remains of the bodies had been found in the graves. One man took out of one grave in one day $1,000 worth of things, among which were three gold plates, of the size of desert plates, and the thickness of a stout tin plate, an eagle of the size of a span, and many other animals and insects beautifully manufactured.

This is the richest grave that has been found as yet, but none have been opened that have not produced something. The old man who made the discovery kept his secret for some time, and it is reported that he succeeded in accumulating about $4,000. The place where the first discovery was made is called Bugaba, situated on the other side of the river Piedra on the road toward the Costa Rica frontier, but as the whole of the foot of the Cordilleras, in Chiriqui, is full of 'huacas,' it will take many thousand people during many years, before the whole will be dug up. The finding of so much worked-up gold in the 'huacas' is a positive proof that the country must be very rich in gold, and I have no doubt that as soon as the above facts become known to the real mining public, rich and extensive deposits of the ore will be discovered.

The rivers are now very high and most of them impassable owing to the rains, otherwise more persons would have started for the diggings. People who come to work here must expect to rough it, live on tasajo (dried beef) and plantains, and sleep in the open air; it is no easy matter to dig holes eight or ten feet deep and remove large stones.

All kinds of ghost stories are afloat among the natives, who report hearing unearthly noises and tambores (drums) in the Cordilleras, which they attribute to His Sable Majesty who does not wish the graves to be molested."

A correspondent of the same paper, who is evidently familiar with the locality in which the discoveries have been made, writes as follows:

"The discovery is a very interesting one in many points of view. The possession of such a quantity of the precious metal must inevitably tend to improve the industrial prosperity of that province, populate the country, and eventually lead to the discovery of the mines from which the gold has been originally obtained, and which can only be in the adjacent Cordilleras.

They further show the universality of that belief in immortality, which like geological strata, we find in the new world as well as in the old. From the tumulus which contained the warrior, his horse and his drinking cup, to be used again in the halls of Odin of our Scandinavian ancestors, to the playthings of the Indian children, now brought to light in the "Huacas" of Chiriqui; the earthen barrows of ancient Troy, Greece and Scythia in the steppes of Tartary; (where two corpses were found wrapped in sheets of gold weighing 40 pounds,) the mounds of the valley of the Mississippi and the table lands of Mexico—all speak the same sentiment; and it is to be regretted that no intelligent artist and "correspondent" is present at Chiriqui to depict and record the nature and form of these interesting relics of lost tribes, as modern avarice shall have destroyed the only hieroglyphics that remain to us of their industry, their hopes and fears about a future existence.

The ancient burying grounds are indicated in various ways—some have a heap of stones piled up rudely over the grave, others are shown by a piece of the column of basaltic rock, placed in the centre, some have a circle of stones inclosing the grave. They are found everywhere throughout the Province, from the shores of the Lagoon of Chiriqui to the Islands of the Pacific. They exist in the deepest valleys and along the highest recesses of the Cordilleras. Such as have been opened hitherto in the wooded plains produced but little gold. They were probably an agricultural race, and the utensils of the dead were in relation thereto. The present discovery has taken place near two villages called Boqueron and Bujaba, westward towards Punta Burica and Golfo Dulce. The plains thence become heavily wooded. Trees of large girth are found over the "huacas." The data as to their age is by no means precise. That they were before the conquest is plain enough, seeing that the conquerors respected neither the temples of God, nor the repose of the dead, if gold was to be gained.

These tribes then, were well acquainted with the precious metal, and shew a great deal of ingenuity and taste in the working of it into favorite images and figures of reptiles and tigers. I have myself traced these graves in happy ignorance, some years ago, to the shores of Golfo Dulce, and if the gold mines are found they will probably be about the headwaters of the Chiriqui Viejo, or the abandoned gold mines of Tisingal, which used to give the King of Spain an annual fifth of 250,000 castellanos of gold. These mines were located somewhere between Bocas del Toro and Golfo Dulce. The enmity of the Buccaneers, combined with the Mosquito Indians, is said to have caused their abandonment.

Chiriqui, judging from its dead, must have been an exceedingly populous country, and while the present few inhabitants are rejoicing over the spoils of aboriginal industry and superstition, it is to be hoped that the discovery may lead to a better knowledge of the resources of the country and the development thereof.

NEWS FROM CALIFORNIA.

The Bark Messenger Bird and her Captain.

From the San Francisco Bulletin, July 20.

We have gone to considerable trouble for the purpose of placing before our readers a statement of facts in relation to the missing bark Messenger Bird, Capt. JOHN H. DELBE, which "turned up" at Tahiti about the middle of May last. There has been about this vessel and the mysterious proceedings of her master, a great deal of speculation in the commercial community, and every fact or even rumor in relation to her will be read with interest. It is known that the Captain has run off with the vessel; that he has appropriated the cargo, and traversed oceans unlawfully; he has committed unauthorized acts, which jeopardize the rights and property of others, and some of the most complicated questions of mercantile law arise out of his transactions; so that, should the Messenger Bird be seized and brought into a Court, its name would be known almost as long as Admiralty law, and the name of DELBE be handed down to posterity as one of the greatest barrators of modern times. For these reasons it is interesting to give all that can be gleaned concerning the wanderer and her bold Captain.

Unfortunately, our information is scant. The mate of the vessel and the steward, who left her at Tahiti and arrived here on the ship William on Tuesday evening, are not very well posted, and it is evident from their conversation that Capt. DELBE attended to his affairs himself—making few confidants, and intrusting no person with his secrets. Some points, however, can be made out from their accounts of the matter, and we give them as they were given to us. The steward, a young man, states that he shipped at Providence for a voyage to Rio de Janeiro, and other ports of South America, and back to the United States. He is not able to give the length of time for which he shipped, nor to state any but a few particulars of the contract made with him. He says that the vessel proceeded to near Richmond and took on board over 3 000 barrels of flour, and 250 half barrels, and proceeced to Rio, where it lay about five weeks, in the neighborhood of Christmas time. There the flour was unshipped and a cargo of coffee taken on board, besides a quantity of money.

At that place the mate, second mate, carpenter, and several sailors were discharged, and several others taken on board. A sailor named JOHN WILLIAMS, who had shipped before the mast, was promoted to be mate and acted in that capacity till the vessel reached Tahiti From Rio the vessel proceeded to Terra del Fuego, where she stopped to take in wood, and then proceeded to Valparaiso, where some six hundred bags of coffee were disposed of, more money taken on board, and the vessel proceeded to Tahiti, where she arrived about May 14. It was supposed by the crew that she was bound for San Francisco; but it soon became evident that this port was not her destination, and the steward left her and here his story ends. During the whole course of the voyage he knew nothing of the captain's intentions. He merely saw what took place as it passed before his eyes. He saw large quantities of silver on board but that was all he knew about it.

The mate, who could tell much, probably, if so disposed, thinks that Capt DELBE will "turn up all right" in the course of a few months, in one of the great commercial cities of the Atlantic, though he admits that the proceedings were not exactly lawful ones. He says that DELBE has a "pile" of money, and will soon have much more, and that will cure much that is rank; but it may be remarked that a late spree has somewhat muddled up his perception, and consequently his views must be received with grains of allowance. According to the views he has been pleased to communicate, he shipped at Norfolk for Rio and the western seaboard of South (?) America. At Rio he was promoted to be mate. He received and receipted for a large amount of bullion and coin at Rio and Valparaiso, but the amount he is unable to give. When in the Southern Pacific, he supposed that he was coming to San Francisco, (for which port the vessel cleared at Valparaiso,) but upon weighing anchor at Tahiti the captain took him aft and gave him "some information," whereupon he replied by telling the captain to order round the boat and put him ashore.

The information is supposed to have been the intended voyage of the captain, and a liberal offer, but the mate answered that he was going to San Francisco, and would not proceed further in the affair. In the meanwhile, a portion of the cargo of coffee, said to be 1,200 bags of 160 pounds each, had been transhipped from the Messenger Bird to the William, and in this latter vessel the mate took passage for this port, leaving Capt. DELBE to prosecute his voyage without him.

The mate states that the captain used him well, paid him promptly, and paid his passage, as well as that of the steward, to San Francisco, and it seems to be for those reasons that he does not like to say much that might compromise him. It seems from his conversation, that he brought a package of papers to this city, and left them at a certain place: but that is all he is willing to state about it. It is his impression that DELBE was involved in some manner in this city, and did not wish to come here.

The report that the vessel proceeded from Tahiti to Sydney, he laughs at; but does not know or is unwilling to state where she did go. All that could be gathered in relation to this part of the subject, was that the captain had sold the vessel, that he would soon leave her, that she would be seized and sold, that her cargo of coffee would amount to nothing—for it seems that it was not good in the beginning, and got damaged at the Horn—and that the captain would take another conveyance for the place at which he might choose to stop. There was one passenger, who went by the name of CHESTERFIELD, and he seems to have had a hand in the business.

Capt. DELBE is said to be a Virginian, an educated, good business man, and was once a lieutenant in the United States Navy. He was accompanied by his wife and two daughters, one about 14, and the other about 10 years of age. He is said to have relatives in this city, and it is supposed that the package above referred to was intended for them. The exact nature and extent of his offences are as yet unknown; but that much is wrong is plain. At Tahiti, it is reported, he rubbed off the word Bird, and his bark sailed under the name of the Messenger; but this may have been due to some repairs, involving the destruction of that portion of the vessel bearing the word Bird.

It is estimated that he left Tahiti with nearly 2 500 bags of coffee, and in the neighborhood of $40,000 in money. How he is to make the additional "pile" which the note speaks of, remains to be seen. It is stated, however, that his crew are all Dutch, and say "Yaw" to everything he orders, so that, whatever may be his plans, they are likely to be carried out.

As for the coffee, which arrived in the William, and for which Capt. DELBE is said to have received an advance at Tahiti, a replevin suit has been commenced against it in the Twelfth District Court, by JOHN GALOP, and it was seized last evening, under process by the Sheriff. Mr. GALLOP alleges that there are 1,200 bags—that they belong to him—and that they are worth $25,000.

Review of the San Francisco Markets.

From the Bulletin, July 20.

A very limited business has been transacted in this market during the past fortnight. An active trade is not usually looked for during the month of July, and the causes to which we referred in our last fortnightly review, have continued to restrict operations, and to make business of little importance. But few fluctuations in prices are to be noted, rates having been nominally sustained without the opportunity of determining the actual condition of the market, owing to the default of buyers.

Holders of goods have been obliged to refrain from forcing sales by the certainty that they could not dispose of them without great sacrifices. The usual method of forcing goods at auction has also been less resorted to, it being evident that a further decline in prices would result from any attempts to realize. The aggregate transactions therefore, are of little moment, and afford but limited material for a review.

Within the past thirty days there have been but five arrivals from domestic Atlantic ports. A number of vessels have consequently in the meanwhile been considered due, and at the present time there is a large accumulation of merchandise liable to be placed upon the market at any moment. This circumstance has, to some extent, prevented the country trade from sending forward orders, and made the city jobbers disinclined to purchase from stocks already in store. It is the prevailing impression that, upon the receipt of the quantity of goods that are now due, the market will go still lower, while none are so sanguine as to anticipate that a change to the disadvantage of buyers can ensue from the offering of additional supplies.

In addition to this incentive to the country trade to refrain from calling upon as at present for goods, the dullness usual to the season prevails, and a large indebtedness on the part of interior traders to their business connections in this city exists, which will require liquidation before operations can be resumed. The deficiency in the latter respect we are inclined to attribute more to the custom of settling up old accounts when new bills are incurred than to any positive disability on their part to meet their engagements. The funds will most likely be forthcoming to square up old bills as soon as new ones shall require to be incurred, but a settlement will be essential to the renewal of business.

Without expressing an opinion as to the probable course of our market upon the opening of the Fall trade, we may venture the suggestion that its condition, to the termination of the period when active operations of the season shall cease with the setting in of the rains, can by no possibility be accepted by parties at the East as an occasion to resume shipments. We infer that there has been a desirable cessation on their part since the 1st inst., and that there will be during the Fall trade with us a moderate revival in prices or at least that goods will become salable at some price.

But no hope can be indulged of even alleviating the very serious losses that must in any event be incurred, if upon the first faint revival of trade parties here plunge into unwarrantable speculations, or others abroad take it for granted that they can find a profitable market for shipments until the old stocks here shall be relieved by consumption.

For quite a period of late we have had occasion also to speak of the heavy stocks of East India and Chinese products. These continue to be augmented with a declining tendency in prices. Such goods as are supplied to us from European ports are now in excessive supply, but the immense glut of American merchandise, while it keeps the market depressed and renders money scarce, prevents any activity in imports that otherwise would be having fair profits.

The Government of New-South Wales have announced their intention of recommending to the Legislature the purchase and management of the Alpacas. An interview took place, March 8, between the Governor of New Zealand and a number of native chiefs, in reference to the land question. The chiefs were divided as to selling their lands. TE TEIRA, a prominent man among the natives, said, during the interview: "Listen, Governor. I will not permit the sale. Waitara is in my hands. I will not give it up. I will not! I will not. I will not!" and turning to his tribe, added: "Arise, let us go;" whereupon he and his followers abruptly withdrew. The offers of some of the party to relinquish their lands were accepted.

FROM KANSAS.

Marcus J. Parrott Nominated for Congress—Politics in Kansas—The New Constitution—The Opposition of the Democrats—The Crops, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

LAWRENCE, Kansas, Wednesday, Aug. 3, 1859.

MARCUS J. PARROTT was, to-day, nominated by Republican Convention as a candidate for Delegate to Congress. He received 57 out of 103 votes cast, on an informal ballot, and was declared the nominee of the party by acclamation. The Convention met in this city, and was organized—JAMES M. WINCHELL, of Osage County, in the Chair. The Committee on Credentials reported 105 names as members of the Convention. Mr. PARRATT having received the nomination, came forward, and after thanking the delegates for the honor they had conferred upon him, gave a brief account of his stewardship during the last Congress,—the impossibility of his doing much, on account of the Democrats having absolute control of the Lower as well as the Upper Houses of Congress,—their opposition to the West, and determination to do nothing that would advance our interests as a Territory. He assured the Convention that they could not expect anything from the party in power except insult and abuse. He felt confident that we should receive some favors from the next Congress, because it would be controlled by the Opposition, who would indorse our movement to organize a State Government, and become a member of the American Union, respect our application to become a fixed star in the constellation of the Republic, and secure the triumph of our cause.

The Delegates all pledged themselves to labor assiduously to secure the success of our nominee in the election in November next, and but little fear is apprehended of his defeat. We all intend that Mr. PARROTT shall be triumphantly elected over any man the Democrats can put in the field against him. He is destined to represent our Territory in the next Congress. The most prominent candidates for the Democratic nomination are A. C. DAVIS, District Attorney appointed by Mr. BUCHANAN, and EX-Judge JOHNSON, who was appointed by the Pierce Administration, at the first organization of this Territory, Associate Justice, and afterwards removed, together with GOV. REEDER and Judge ELMORE, for alleged speculations in Kaw Half-Breed lands. The Judge possesses talents of a high order, and is (barring his sentiments) eminently qualified for the position. He is not enough of a fire-eater and border ruffian to satisfy the Pro Slavery and controlling element in the Democratic Party of this Territory, while DAVIS is a renegade, sufficiently debased to eat dirt and crawl at the feet of his masters, a mere tool, lick-spittle and craven, to satisfy even the most violent Slave propagandist in Kansas; he stands a much better chance of success in the nominating Convention. As candidates for the nomination Mr. SLOUGH, of Leavenworth, and ROBERT J. MITCHELL, a renegade from the Free-State party, are also mentioned.

But the old Border-Ruffian chiefs, Gen. EASTON, EMERY, ISAACS, FRANKLIN, LECOMPT, and others of like notoriety, will doubtless control the Convention and secure the nomination of a man of their choice as a candidate for Delegate. Some of these men are reported as favoring the selection of Ex-Judge LECOMPT, the Jeffreys of Kansas, as the standard-bearer of the Democratic Party. But the shrewd managers in the ranks will prevent it, on account of the odious reputation already attained by the Judge, and secure as violent a fire-eater as LECOMPT, but one not so well known.

The new Constitution is deservedly popular with the people, and in October will receive their hearty indorsement. The refusal of the Democrats to sign it in Convention, is only a stronger commendation of the document to our favor.

But few expected the party that made and signed the infamous Lecompton Constitution, embodying, as it did, the vile spirit of oppression, and was calculated to convert our beautiful territory into a slave-mart, and stain our soil with the blood and tears of slaves, to indorse a constitution framed by the representatives of the freedom-loving people of Kansas. Such a supposition was far from our expectation. We are compelled to give our enemies credit for their consistency, in sustaining and upholding oppression. They have always hated the spirit of liberty that animated our people, and still manifest their hatred by refusing to indorse the work of the Wyandotte Convention, which is but another expression of the popular will in favor of freedom and against slavery. The opposition of the Democracy towards the new Constitution will only excite our people to a more resolute and persistent determination in its support.

If the Constitution is ratified by the electors of Kansas at the election in October, they will be called upon soon after to indicate their choice for the different officers under the same. There are already several candidates in the field for the office of Governor. The most prominent are JAMES BLOOD, Mayor of this city, CYRUS R. HOLLIDAY, Mayor of Topeka, HENRY J. ADAMS, ex Mayor of Leavenworth, and the Rev. H. P. JOHNSON, of the same city. All of whom are men of sterling integrity and great executive ability.

Candidates for the other State offices are numerous and the love of official position is the controlling spirit of Western men.

The season has been very propitious for the success of the crops. Corn and garden truck never promised a more abundant yield than at present. Our farmers are very much elated at their prospective wealth—coming to them in the Fall when they gather their harvest. A few rods from where I am now writing there is a field of corn which, on an average, is nine feet high. Some of it is eleven feet, and it is all on a high roll of prairie-land, not in the river bottom where corn generally does better.

The Spring wheat did remarkably well this season. Last year the most of it rusted, and was ruined.

Yours, JACQUES.

AMERICAN SCIENTIFIC ASSOCIATION.

Closing Performances of the Springfield Session.

The Savans Rejoicing in Each Other—Their Gallantry—Their Pleasantries—Their Budget of Thanksgivings—Their Mutual Admiration, &c., &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

SPRINGFIELD, Tuesday evening, Aug. 9, 1859.

The American Association for the Promotion of Science finished all its heavy work at 6 o'clock P. M. yesterday—having at that hour heard all the papers that were to be read either substantially or by title. But there still remained a pretty bit of pyrotechnics to be fired at Hampden Hall, whereunto, at 7½ o'clock, a dense crowd of ladies and gentlemen gathered. President ALEXANDER announced the Gillies Solar Parallax Committee, on which, in the confusion of the opening, I heard only the name of Professor GIBBS, of New-York.

It was resolved to hold the next session (at Newport R. I., as before ordered) beginning at 10 A. M., Aug. 1, 1860.

Then the ball opened. Superintendent BACHE moved a resolution of thanks to the Local Committee, with its distinguished Chairman and efficient Secretary. When the Association, at its last meeting, were looking about for the place of its next gathering, it determined to inaugurate a new policy. Remembering an ancient invitation from Springfield, it availed itself of that, intending to shift for itself, to leave behind the hospitalities that had become magnificent and almost oppressive, with which they had always been greeted. But the good people would have no such policy inaugurated in their town. They appointed a Committee to take care of us, with their most distinguished citizen at its head, Mr. BLISS, the worthy son of a worthy sire, known the world over as foremost in every good and liberal work, the normal type of a New-England man—one never failing heartily to engage in any work calculated to benefit his place or his race. [Applause.] And for their Secretary, appointing a gentleman (Dr. OTIS) who, though young among them, was already well known as most worthy of them. Springfield had proved to be just the place for such a meeting—not so large that they were lost and swallowed up as they would be in a great city; not so small that every convenience for meeting and enjoyment was not afforded. If the meeting had failed in anything it was only in that, with a few excellent, beautiful exceptions, there a profound bow to MRS. LE CONTE and MRS. CASWELL, which was soon after rewarded with a fragrant bouquet, the ladies who had traveled over the continent with them were missing. It was very wrong in them to stay away, for it was very hard to resist the attractions of those who came up to fill their place. But Springfield had done no more than they ought to have expected, remembering its reputation, and the injunctions of the Constitution of the Bay State, which commanded all its citizens to do whatever contributed to promote science and good humor. And had not the Association been good-humored? If a last proof was wanting, it could be found in the spirited proceedings of the morning, when through their Standing Committee they had attempted to put through a measure because one who had generally acted against them had urged it at previous meetings,—though with all their efforts it had received its coup-de-grace, to-day, at the hands of its own friends. [Applause, and the resolution adopted.]

Prof. HENRY offered a resolution of thanks to the Mayor, Aldermen, &c., for the use of the City Hall. It was not the Association's object to go from place to place delivering popular lectures—they came up to assist each other in their studies. In honoring them the municipality had honored abstract science. It had been called an association for mutual adulation. We did indeed abound in mutual congratulation. We delighted to congratulate each other when we brought truths to light that had never before been revealed to man. There was no greater pleasure than in pursuing to its end a scientific investigation. Though when we begin to seek truth it may be for the sake of increasing our reputation—if we pursue long, we learned soon to love her for her own sake. Our motto was, (the quotation is from memory,)

"Seek truth where'er it can be found
On Christian or on heathen ground,
Among our friends, among our foes,
The plant revive where'er it grows."

In the ardent pursuit of truth we were not always any too courteous. [The Professor possibly referred to his suggestion the other day, when a solitary reporter sat noting his remarks, that if any notice was made of his extemporaneous lecture it would be desirable to take a little pains and have it done as nearly with accuracy as possible. The courteous young reporter immediately blotted out the truthfully reported sentence uttered a minute before, and only sent to the Press the one which followed, and which was diametrically its opposite.] Sometimes looking on, the auditor thought their controversies were somewhat angry, but those passages-at-arms should be accepted as they were in truth, as only earnest contentions for the truth. In illustration he remarked that on meteorology they had contended a good deal over the conflicting theories of HARE, REDFIELD and ESPY. But now it comes out that while there was something wrong in the doctrines of each of these zealous and devoted friends of science, there was very much of truth in them all. ESPY's principal theory truly gives the motive power of storms; REDFIELD's theory of rotary, spiral currents gave the true direction of the wind, and HARE's electrical forces modified them all. It is not our desire to live in the journals of the day, [sensation] but in the records of science. [The resolution was carried.]

Prof. PEIRCE knew that this Association was deemed by some as one dealing only in matters that were not practical, [referring to Dr. HOLLAND's able editorial in the Republican of Tuesday;] as something that only introduced knowledge, dealing with the properties of the voice that sounds in the winds, and that we hear in the shell; of the light that we see in the sunbeam; and teaching that in the depths of the ocean He is present. Those who entertained such opinions would take from the rainbow its colors to stamp them on a piece of calico, [applause,] from the comet its trail to convert it into crinoline, from the firmament its glories to make heads of——[we lost the word in the applause.] It was a wonder that such practical men were not admitted to the Councils of Creation. If they had been, possibly they would have given to the ox his horns, to the serpent no doubt his sting, to man his strength, to the deer his fleetness and grace, but certainly not to woman her beauty. He proposed a new article to the Constitution—"The divine right of beauty is the only one a member of the American Scientific Association ought to acknowledge, and a pretty woman the only tyrant he is not at liberty to resist." [Moderate applause.] Would the Association accept the amendment proposed? [There were a few "ayes."] Carried, said Prof. PEIRCE, for there can be no contrary mind. He moved a resolution of thanks to the ladies of Springfield, for the brilliant reception that had been given by the ladies and gentlemen of Springfield. Carried by acclamation.

Prof. CASWELL offered a resolution of thanks to the Faculty of Amherst College for exposing so freely the treasures of their institution; to the ladies of Amherst for their bountiful and tasteful entertainment, and to the Superintendent of the Western and Amherst and Belchertown Railroads for their admirably managed excursion. He dilated eloquently on the beauties of Amherst scenery—on their landscape, that SHERSTONE might have envied, its delicious landscape, its cultured valley, its sky, its river, its noble old trees, its unequaled beauty, which reconciled him to the lack of any personal vision of the most lauded landscapes of foreign lands. He dwelled at length on the marvellous beauty of the gems of the Shephard collection, on the geological specimens so eloquent of the story of ages past, on the perfect equipments of this young enterprise of the old Bay State, which so many merchant princes, thrifty farmers and intelligent mechanics had united to hasten to maturity. As to the railroads, he paused only to compliment the gentleman who manages more railroads and more successfully than any other man, and to express the thanks he always felt when a large excursion train returned without an accident. [Laughter.]

Col. FOSTER, of Monson, Massachusetts, (and of Illinois,) offered thanks to the Superintendent of the Armory and to other public institutions of the city. Without the courtesies of the ladies the meeting certainly would have proved a failure. A quack had made a fortune selling pills and plasters, and of course built a mansion, on the threshhold of which the architect chiseled the word—"SALVE." The people of Springfield had treated their wounds with salve and inscribed Sal-ve on all their threshholds. [Laughter.] We had been nobly entertained, but he thought we had entertained nobly in turn. We had brought out our menagerie of primeval animals. One had paraded his colossal mastodon, one his ichthyosaurus, and one his plethiosaurus. Birds extinct for ages, beasts hidden in rock for unknown centuries, fields that were old and mossy ages before the flood, had been brought back to entertain the entertaining people of Springfield. One had throttled the four elements, fire, air, earth, and water, and dragged them out to exhibition. One had lifted the trap-door of the earth and displayed the central fires. Another with aërial flight had flown to regions on the verge of the universe, and, returning, read a paper of his experiences. A geologist on the hottest day of our tarry, had created a glacier just to the north, and made a cataract roar from its face and a river trickle under its shadow. Nothing was lacking to its completeness but to fringe its refreshing banks with a luxuriant growth of mint. [Uproarious applause.] One resurrectionist [alluding to the no-to-rious Kamdactylus sub humanus of Dr. BARRATT, of Middletown, Connecticut, whose paper on the "Antetype of Man," the Standing Committee could not see the beauties of, for which reason it was not read, though the drawings illustrative, covered the fronts of the galleries of the City Hall] had disinterred the remains of one of the anthropophagi, whose heads do grow beneath their shoulders. The first distinctive forms of organic life had been exhibited, and the geologists who seldom agree on anything, had agreed that they lived in the year One, under the reigns of the old kings Night and Chaos. Another had brought down the bones of a whale stranded three or four thousand years ago on one of the old sea-beaches of inland Vermont. He had a theory of his own to account for young HITCHCOCK's whale. Most of us remember that some four thousand years ago, one Jonah went a yatching, grew sea-sick, and in a bad lee-lurch went overboard. This whale was the veritable fellow who swallowed our ancestor—and next year, after Prof. PEIRCE had disposed of his comet with the everlasting tail, he purposed to parade his whale. Winding up most soberly, Col. FOSTER was loudly applauded and his resolution carried.

Dr. GIBBON had been furnished by the handsomely-abused Standing Committee with a resolution of thanks to such of the railroads as carried members free one way, but, as Prof. CASWELL had done up the railroads, he would fall back on the steamboats, which he hoped would continue to exercise their generosity until they carried all the Springfield people free of cost from New-York to North Carolina.

Prof. PEIRCE proposed thanks to the President and Vice-President, on which the members all rose to express their undivided Aye.

President ALEXANDER pithily and handsomely responded. He hoped sincerely it was true that this was a Mutual Admiration Society. Who should so intelligently know how to admire high scientific attainments as scientific men?—and why not say so if they felt a mutual admiration? They had complimented him as a good presiding officer, he was too careful of his reputation to spoil it at all by a long speech at the last.

Prof. CHAUVENET, to the compliment to the Secretary, responded that he should rather thank the Association which so amicably arranged its business, that to keep its record was one of the simplest and pleasantest of tasks.

Prof. BACHE offered a tender of congratulations to their octogenarian brother, Prof. SILLIMAN, [he was 80 years old on the 8th inst.,] and the hearty hope that he might live yet many years with his eye undimmed and his natural force abated. Carried with cheers.

The programme ended, President ALEXANDER pronounced the Association adjourned until 10 A. M. of Aug. 1, 1860, at Newport, R. I.

So it ended. This is a marvellously pretty place, and it has grown, within twenty years, like a weed. When at the Baltimore meeting, it was proposed to meet here next, Dr. GIBBON objected that he had heard that all the railroads of the United States ran through Springfield, and that he had somewhere heard it was unhealthy. The first night I stopped here I bought the jolly Doctor must have been correctly informed as to the railroads. There is a brief interval just past midnight when it is still—solemnly still, and the chirping of crickets on the grave old elms, and the song of the gas at the mouth of the burner is all that breaks the silence. But a moment after a cattle train comes thundering into the dépôt, that lies just anent the Massasoit. Then the lowing of cattle begins; then another train; then ten trains more; then thirty more—whistling, screaming, snorting, ringing innumerable bells, a dozen at a time, backing, going ahead, blowing off, starting out, rushing, panting, thundering—and you dream of ballooning just over Solferino, of riding on the verge of the central fires, of reviving BUNYAN's vision of the hole in the hill. Mayor CALHOUN, on the first day here, welcomed the savans to the rural quiet of this little town. It was the richest joke of the season. A gentleman who formerly kept the Massasoit but now "keeps a hotel" in New-York, told me that on the first week he was in your town he could not sleep for the unusual quiet of your streets, and had to buy a bass drum for his boy, to keep his spirits up. I dread getting back to New-York for the same reason.

As to the unhealthiness of Springfield, I am sure people die here, or they never would have thought of laying out the prettiest cemetery in the land. It is a large and roomy plateau on the old bank of the river, with a valley running through its midst. Springs gush out illimitably along the hill-sides, and being hindered, burst out in numberless fountains, magnificent elms, lordly oaks, great spreading chestnuts, mountain-ash now in their full beauty of orange colored berries, maples that a month hence will be gay with all gorgeous and delicate colors, fill it with shadows. And wherever nature has left a little spot that art without impertinence might intrude, statuary, shafts of marble, living hedges and pastures of flowers are placed to add to the beauty of this most enchanting home of the cherished dead. It comes hard to leave Springfield, but the Association has adjourned, and the fates willing, and the mails connecting, you will hear from me next at Amherst, whose Commencement week is already creating a great draft upon all this region.

AFFAIRS IN VIRGINIA.

Attractive Features of the Interior of Virginia—Speculations on the Presidency—John Letcher's Disunion Scheme—Destructive Policy of Virginia on the Subject of Internal Improvements—Inquest, Sentence and Execution of a Man upon a Charge of Murdering his Wife, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

HARRISONBURGH, Rockingham County, Va., Saturday, Aug. 6, 1859.

To the citizens of other States, Virginia is in a great measure a terra incognita. During a short tour through the State, I have seen more in the way of scenery than I have ever heard or read of in the various treatises published upon the subject. On the route from Alexandria to this point by the Orange and Alexandria Central Railroad, there is presented to the eye a grander diversity of mountain scenery than is embraced within any thousand miles of travel from one end of the Union to the other. The distance from Alexandria to Staunton is about 150 miles; but before arriving at Charlottesville, the country presents no attractive features. From this point a gradual ascent is made until the summit of the Blue Ridge is gained, whence a perfect view is commanded of the surrounding country for several miles. The railroad is carried along the mountain sides, the cars overhanging, as it were, the steep precipices, below which reveal, in their craggy and chaotic outline, a spectacle more grand and imposing than the Cliffs of Dover or the far-famed Alps. After the summit is gained, one is puzzled to ascertain how a grade so precipitate had been overcome. From a mere general view it would seem impossible, the elevation appearing so great and so precipitate as to make its ascent on foot seem a matter of difficulty. But this apparent difficulty is overcome by a series of ingenious curvatures and windings, giving to the road a peculiar serpentine shape, so that what is about a mile by a direct line of ascent, becomes over a dozen by this elaborate process Until within the last twelvemonths'a great dea more difficulty had to be encountered than is now in the way. The higher peaks of the mountain have been tunneled, and the steepest grades are thus overcome; but the elevation still attained affords an opportunity for a view, such as cannot be surpassed in the country. From the highest point of elevation to Staunton is about sixteen or eighteen miles, and the grade over this distance is slow and regular, the natural depression of the country west of the Blue Ridge being far less than on the east. The country around Staunton is remarkably rich and productive. It is the first part of the rich valley lying between the Blue Ridge and the Alleghanies, and is reported to be the most productive region of the State. As you approach Staunton, your are carried within a few hundred yards of the Lunatic Asylum and the Institute for the Deaf, Dumb and the Blind, the former lying to the left and the latter to the right of the road, both presenting, in their large and imposing proportions, a spectacle somewhat novel and unexpected in a region so secluded. They exhibit in their grand outlines a style of architecture and taste which would seem better adapted to one of your large Northern cities. They are both State Institutions, and are, unfortunately, liberally patronized. So great were the demands upon the Lunatic Asylum, that it became necessary to project a new institution of that kind in the trans-Alleghany region of the State, and it is, as I understand, now in progress of construction in Weston, Lewis County. Staunton is a small town of about two thousand inhabitants. Before the construction of the Central Railroad, it commanded a complete monopoly of the trade for several miles along this rich valley; but the facility of transit and transportation which the road afforded to the large cities of the East, destroyed this monopoly and reduced the trade of Staunton to a mere retail business. Such, I understand, is the result in all the small towns of the interior, which happens to be located on a railroad line. The larger towns at the termini of these roads, are of course benefited by these facilities in the rates of the diminution in these instances. The law business must evidently flourish in Staunton, judging by the number of lawyers' shingles which I noticed suspended from the different houses in the town. I counted not less than forty within a short limit, and these constituted, as I was informed, not half the number in the town. This bespeaks a strong proclivity to litigation on the part of the Stauntonians.

From Staunton to this town, a distance of twenty miles, the country exhibits more signs of prosperity than are to be witnessed perhaps within any similar extent throughout the State. The population is made up chiefly of the descendants of Pennsylvania Dutch, who emigrated hence many years ago. Their system of farming is peculiarly after the style of that thrifty race in the Keystone State. The barns, in many instances, surpass in style and elegance the dwellings of their owners, most of them being constructed on solid stone foundations, with superstructures of wood, and of a capacity fully commensurate with the largest requirements of the extensive and well cultivated farms. Much care is evidently bestowed on the raising of stock, and in no part of the country can be seen a finer class of dairy cattle. The whole system of farming is a decided improvement upon that pursued in the other regions of the State.

The distance from Staunton to this town is traveled by stage over a Macadamized road of easy grade. There is nothing of much attraction in the way of scenery to be witnessed, the chief feature of interest being the extensive agricultural improvements, in which the farmers of this region pride themselves so much. These features, however, have their attractions, and to me, at least, they were as agreeable as the grandest mountain scenery. They embody more of the real, substantial elements of a country's welfare and power, than all of the romantic beauty and grand mountain scenery upon which Virginians love to theorize. These have their charms, but they would be worthless, indeed, in the absence of the substantial benefits which the well-cultivated fields and rich pastures of Rockingham annually yield. In less than a year, this town will have a railroad connection with Alexandria via the Mannasses Gap Railroad, which is being pushed vigorously forward from Woodstock, its present terminus, to this point. Thus will another large element of trade be lost to that abode of lawyers—Staunton.

This County, (Rockingham,) with the Counties of Page and Shenandoah, constitute the great Democratic region of Virginia; and the people very naturally speculate as to who will be the choice of their Party for the Presidential contest in 1860. So far as I can ascertain, WISE is their first choice, and this presumption is strengthened by the fact that the Member of Congress elect, (J. T. HARRIS,) is a strong Wise man, elected by a considerable majority over Mr. JAS. H. SKINNER, the regular nominee. HARRIS boldly proclaimed himself a Wise candidate, and despite the influence of the Whigs, which was exerted vigorously in behalf of his opponent, he carried the election. This was JOHN LETCHER'S former district, and though SKINNER was known to be his choice, his influence could not counterbalance the great moral power of HARRIS' avowed predilections for WISE. This is conclusive of the choice of the "Tenth Legion" in the Presidential question.

I am informed upon very good authority that JOHN LETCHER has openly avowed his purpose to hoist the flag of disunion in Virginia should a Republican be elected to the Presidency in 1860. This report derives strong feasibility from Mr. L's. avowals on the hustings. His reported sayings at different points during the late canvass represent him as having avowed a similar intent in the contingency mentioned. He even speaks, as I am told, of taking possession of Fort Monroe and ho ding it for purposes of defence connected with the formation of a Southern Confederacy. This is making amends for his indorsement of the Ruffner pamphlet in 1847, and no doubt his sudden conversion to the doctrine of disunion is dictated by some such motive. Perhaps he thinks that an extreme policy, such as these avowals foreshadow, will make up for his past anti-Slavery doctrine, and that a period of identity with the Southern ultraists will establish a proper political equilibrium which might contribute a fair average of conservatism for a life time. His last position, however, is, if anything, more obnoxious than the first, and he can hardly establish that main in his political career which he would fain aspire to, by any such process as this. That he has expressed the sentiments herein imputed to him, there is no reason to doubt.

The internal improvement policy of Virginia is far from being wise or consistent with her best interests. No sooner does she construct a railroad line than she charters another whose interests are in direct conflict with the completed line. For instance, she constructed a road from Petersburgh to Lynchburgh, and scarcely had the trains commenced running and the line been in successful operation, when she charters another road from Lynchburgh to Charlottesville to connect with the Orange and Alexandria Railroad, thus diverting the trade carried over the Virginia and Tennessee Railroad to Lynchburgh, from the Southside Road, or Lynchburgh and Petersburgh Road, to this extension of the Orange and Alexandria Road. By this divergence, Richmond and Petersburgh are sacrificed to the interests of Alexandria and Baltimore. And so with the Mannassas Gap Railroad, which is intended to be carried to the Virginia and Tennessee, thence to divert the trade of the southwestern region from Lynchburgh to Baltimore and other northern cities. Her whole internal improvement policy is obnoxious to somewhat similar objections.

A man named MURPHY was executed at Covington, in this State, in the early part of last month for the murder of his wife. The circumstances of the case were these: The murdered woman, who, it appears, was a dissipated, drunken wretch, was found dead at an early hour in the morning outside the door of her husband's house. Upon examination of her person some marks of violence were discovered, and the fact being ascertained that her husband maltreated her the night before, a warrant was issued for his arrest, and he was committed, after a preliminary examination, to abide his trial for murder in the first degree. The case came up at the last Spring term of the Circuit Court, held in Covington, and a verdict of guilty was rendered. The principal witness in the case was a degraded woman who participated with the deceased in her dissipations, and who was hostile to the husband for his repeated remonstrances and warnings to her against associating with his wife. It came out in evidence that the deceased entered the house after dark in a drunken condition, and that she so annoyed the husband as to cause him to beat her. During the night similar provocations were given by the deceased, the same result following, until finally her conduct became so intolerable as to have caused the husband to force her out of doors. She was found dead the following morning, and whether death was produced by the beating or by cold, remained entirely a matter of conjecture. The Judge (HUDSON) deeming conviction upon testimony so vague and unjustifiable, intimated his purpose to the prisoner's lawyers, to grant a new trial. This intimation was made on Saturday evening, but the Judge came into Court on Monday morning, and pronounced sentence of death upon the wretched man, hearing, doubtless, meanwhile, that granting a new trial would be apt to create dissatisfaction with the populace. He had, however, some troubles of conscience about the matter, and having now averted the popular odium which an adherence to his original purpose would incur, he sought through some other agency to save the life of the culprit. He invited his lawyers to enter a bill of exceptions, but they refused, saying that upon his head the blood of the man should rest. A petition for a respite was sent to the Governor, which was granted, the idea being that the lawyers would meanwhile take some steps to save the wretched man's life. The respite terminated on the 27th of May, and a further respite of thirty days was granted, but no move was made by judge or lawyers to rectify the past error. On the 27th of May, the day to which the first respite was extended, the populace held a meeting, and adopted resolutions expressive of disappointment and indignation because the man was not hung. They expressed a purpose to lynch him, if a further respite was granted after the 1st of July. There was none applied for, and he was executed on that day—innocently, as many here and elsewhere believe. A member of the jury that convicted him was in the jail on his return to it after the first respite, upon a charge of stealing bacon and having false keys in his possession. Most of the others who composed it are said to be much on a par with this fellow.

There was a copious fall of rain in this region on yesterday, and it was much needed. As it is, the corn crop is considerably damaged from the protracted drought.

The springs throughout Virginia are reaping a rich harvest. Hundreds pass through Stanton daily on their route to the several watering places in the Western Mountains.

An Editor's Report of his Ballooning.

From the Utica Observer, Aug. 8.

Wednesday last was a great day in Oswego. It was shortly after noon of that day that Prof. COX, formerly an associate of CARLINCOURT, and now proprietor of the balloon Excelsior, started from that city, accompanied by Mr. C. H. HULL, of the Oswego Palladium, with the avowed intention of ballooning to the Atlantic Coast, and thus complete the journey begun by WISE, LAMOUNTAIN and GAGER. They had a fair day, and the crowd to witness the ascension was great. But the exceeding fair weather defeated the intention of the voyagers. There was not wind enough astir to carry them to the point they designed to reach. After a pleasant but exciting trip, they concluded their four hours' journey by landing in the town of Watson, Lewis county—barely escaping being carried into the cepths of JOHN BROWN'S Tract.

Engaged in the work of securing their balloon, and transporting it hither, Messrs. COX and HULL did not reach Utica until this morning. They were both in good spirits, and gave us a call. Mr. HULL kindly imparted to us the incidents of the voyage, which we have endeavored to compress into a brief narrative, as follows:

MR. HULL'S NARRATIVE.

Preparations having been completed, Messrs. COX and HULL stepped into the balloon at 1½o'clock. Soon after they were loosed from terra firma, and commenced ascending. The ascent was slow and straight upward. When an altitude of two miles had been reached, the balloon was still almost directly over Oswego city. The day was a warm one below, and there was hardly a breath of air stirring.

After reaching an altitude of two miles, they struck an easterly current. Before encountering this current there was a perfectly clear view of the earth below. The balloon got some distance out over Lake Ontario and Kingston, Oswego, Oneida Lake and other interesting points were distictly visible. How extended was their prospect may be judged from the fact that Kingston is about 60 miles distant from Oswego, measuring in a straight line.

Almost immediately after the balloon started with the easterly current, clouds commenced floating in below the voyagers, so that the earth was in good part hidden from sight. There were no clouds above, and the sun was shining on the balloonists as brilliantly as during the brighest midsummer day. Mr. HULL describes the effect of the sun's rays on the breast of the clouds as of extraordinary brilliancy. So dazzling was the light reflected from the clouds that their eyes suffered injury when allowed to rest upon them.

Going still further upward, the height of three miles was soon reached! When getting up here, the gathering of clouds beneath deprived the balloonists of any knowledge of the direction in which they were moving. They could not judge by the clouds, because they were moving in a precisely opposite direction; and not enough of the earth was visible to enlighten the travelers.

Some peculiar sensations were experienced. They had left a hot city below them, but they found it quite cold in the regions which they had entered. Hearing was quite difficult. It required considerable exertion of the lungs for Messrs COX and HULL to make each other heard. The ear experienced very painful sensations—a continuous aching and dull ringing.

When the æronauts next discovered their true position they found they had left the lake, going over Pulaski, and were crossing a large tract of woods. They were descending rapidly. Not wishing to alight here, they let go all their ballast. It was some time before the balloon commenced rising again; but when its re-ascent began, it continued until the party were higher than they had previously been. In the meantime the grappling-ropes were taken up from the car into the hoop of the balloon, with the intention of casting loose the basket in the event that the throwing out of the ballast should prove insufficient to give the balloon an ascending motion. Speedily, however, the barometer indicated a rapid ascent. Getting past the woods, the villages of Lowville and Martinsburgh came in sight. While these towns were yet twenty miles to the eastward of the balloon, the æronauts commenced to exhaust the gas, with the intention of alighting in or near one of these villages. The descent commencing, the balloon "bellied in,"—that is, the lower part went up until the balloon was in the shape of a bell. This made it a sort of a parachute and delayed the ascent. Getting down within half a mile of the earth, human voices could be heard, though objects so small as a man could not be seen. Here they struck a squall—a thunder-storm being in the vicinity—and the direction of the balloon was very nearly reversed. The motion was found to be very rapid. They were carried over a portion of woods—about a hundred acres in extent, Mr. HULL says—which they had not previously noticed. As they saw they were going to strike there, they made preparations for alighting, by getting firm hold of the ropes, and getting in position to await an expected shock. The grappling irons had been dropped, and were now dragging something like 300 feet behind them, and there was a loud noise of the breaking of limbs as the irons caught on them. The car struck the tops of some trees, and bounced upward. Almost immediately afterward the grappling irons became fixed to a tree, and the balloon swung over, until it was brought down in the top of an immense hemlock tree. The balloon was torn literally to ribbons. The æronauts were entirely safe. Their position was in no wise perilous, for the car lodged firmly in the branches of the tree, and the balloon and net-work were stretched across the tops of neighboring trees. Yet they found it somewhat difficult to get down. They descended by one of the ropes to which the grappling irons were attached.

Descending about 5½ o'clock, they found they had journeyed about four hours and over a hundred miles. They were in the town of Watson, Lewis County, near the eastern edge of JOHN BROWN'S Tract. The distance, in a direct line, from Oswego, is, we estimate, about sixty-five miles.

The balloon reached terra firma but a few minutes before men began to appear to lend any assistance that might be required. They aided in getting the balloon, netting, car and ropes down. These were left in the woods over night, and the most of yesterday was employed in getting them out. It was necessary to construct a road of about a mile in length so that an ox-team might go in as far as the spot where the balloon had landed, and bring it away to Lowville. Messrs. COX and HULL reached that place yesterday afternoon, remained there over night, and, leaving at 3 o'clock this morning, reached Boonville about 8 o'clock, and came thence by the Black River Railroad to Utica.

Mr. HULL, though some of the incidents of his first balloon voyage have been not a little exciting, does not by any means regret that he has made the venturesome journey. It will be a memorable event in his life, and an experience of which comparatively few men ever have the opportunity of possessing themselves. Mr. COX left here for Oswego at 11:15 this morning, and Mr. HULL departed in the New-York. The latter has our warmest thanks for his kindness in relating to us the incidents which form the substance of this narrative. On getting home, he will undoubtedly prepare a much better account for the readers of the Palladium.

The Heart of the Andes in London.

Mr. CHURCH'S noble picture, the "Heart of the Andes," continues to win golden opinions in England. The London Times, of the 27th, contains the following graceful and appreciative notice of this fine work of art:

"In the exhibition of the Royal Academy, this year, are some North American landscapes by American painters, to which justice has not been done by the Hanging Committee. To all persons in this country who are watching with interest the progress of the arts in the New World of the West, this is matter for regret. It is fortunate that in the new and great work of Mr. CHURCH, the first living American landscape painter, (now exhibiting at the German Gallery, No. 168 New Bond-street,) we have an opportunity of judging North American art under more satisfactory conditions than can be united on the crowded walls of the Royal Academy exhibition-rooms.

Mr. CHURCH is already known in this country by his remarkable picture of Niagara, to which we directed attention some years ago. In it he manifested extraordinay power in the vigorous and honest presentment of a scene which has been generally considered to defy the hand of the painter.

Equal power is shown in this new picture, which, as an example of the literal and minute style of landscape painting, which some critics have called 'representative,' others 'historical,' and others 'topographical,' has never been approached for scale and elaborateness by any work of art yet shown in this country.

The study and labor that must have been expended on Mr. CHURCH'S picture deserve to be called 'colassal.' Few men, indeed, would have ventured to grapple with a subject which announces itself as the representation of one of those vast table-lands of Southern America out of which rise the majestic masses of the Andes. The picture is, in a certain sense, a generalization. The painter has ventured to bring into the compass of his large canvass objects which in strict topographical truth it could not have embraced. In order to present at once to the eye one of the enormous mountain spurs which shoot out across the valley that lies between the ranges of Chimborazo on the west and Cotopaxi on the east, together with the snow-crowned summits of one of their giant peaks, the breadth of the space that separates the central pile from either of these mighty mountains has been diminished. We are thus enabled to embrace at a glance, in the middle distance, the table-land intersected with its rivers, falling from level to level by a succession of cataracts; in the further distance the central mountains, made or upilled hill on hill till the receding uplands are first in bars of fleecy cloud; and far away, on the extreme right of the composition, the eye reaches the topmost height, crowned with a half-formed rainbow; and on the left the snow-capped domes and pinnacles of Chimborazo himself, glittering in sunlight under a canopy of cloudless blue. The spectator is supposed to be standing at a considerable elevation, looking down on the river, which, after cutting its way between banks of rock, thickly clothed with such tropical vegetation as is found at the height of the table-land between Quito and Guayaquil, plunges into an abyss immediately under his height of observation. Before it plunges it forms a broad and glassy pool. Along its left bank runs the high road from Guaranda to Hambato, which brings the produce of Quito to the port of Guayaquil, and conveys the foreign goods from the latter place of shipment to the interior of northern Ecuador. The scale of objects is given by a couple of figures, resting at the foot of a cross on the bank of the river. The whole foreground is a marvel of elaborate study. The banks of the river are clothed with forest trees, bright with parasitic orchids, their limbs matted with the green cordage of the lianas and wild vines, and rising from a dense undergrowth of ferns and lichens. Among this luxuriant greenery glow the gorgeous blossoms of the equatorial Flora, and the irridescent splendors of tropical birds and insects. Wandering sunbeams strike here and there on tree-trunk and lichen, pierce the fern-clad hollows of the cliff, or kindle into foam-bows in the spray of the water-falls. Perhaps it is in the representation of these sun freaks, and of all the incidents of the river's course, that the great pictorial skill of the painter is most strikingly manifested. But he has not sacrificed for any such details, however brilliant or tempting, the grandeur of his great whole. In so far as this is susceptible of representation by the minute 'or 'topographical' method which Mr. CHURCH follows, he seems to us to have done well nigh all that can be done by the combination of close study, a keen eye, and a most patient hand.

But many will be of opinion that no possible combination of these can reproduce the impression of a scene combining so many incidents into so colossal a whole, and that the 'suggestive' or 'imaginative' method alone can recreate for the spectator what the saw and felt under the shadow of Chimborazo. Be this as it may, Mr. CHURCH'S picture is not less a grand and a unique work. No landscape painter of our old world has ventured to grapple with such a range of nature as Mr. CHURCH has boldly addressed himself to."

A Bonaparte Among Books—Literary Lotus-Eating.

From the London Literary Review.

While the most successful member of his family is sending the souls of men to Hades, working unnumbered woes to Europe, and subjecting England to ten millions of unnecessary taxation, Prince LUCIEN BONAPARTE is, we hear, staying in the north of England, for the purpose of translating the "Song of Solomon" into the dialect of Durham, and intends, when he has accomplished that feat, to move into the North Riding and translate the same composition into the dialect of Yorkshire. There are some facts which seem to breathe a strange air of quiet repose when we hear them, they take us so completely out of the busy world, which seeks without intermission to get profit or do something useful. They remind us that there are persons in the world who can afford to do things in which the world has no concern. To think of Prince LUCIEN engaged in this occupation is like entering the ivy-grown ruins of an abbey or monastery. We get at once into a region of such preternatural calm and patient content. There is also a gentle emotion of wonder added by the reflection that the person enjoying this perfection of literary leisure is a prince, and not only a prince, but a prince of the race of the turbulent Corsican. It is a grand caprice, and worthy of a man of an imperial line. It is strange when a foreigner attempts to translate any work at all into English; it is doubly strange that he should select the "Song of Solomon" as the test of his skill; but superlatives fail us when we come to the strangeness of his wishing to translate the "Song of Solomon" first into the Durham and then into the Yorkshire dialect. Let us for a moment picture to ourselves the Duke of SUSSEX translating Ovid's Metamorphoses, first into Moldavian and then into Wallachian. There is something high-bred and serene in the unexampled grandeur of uselessness attaching to the Prince's project. Still, it is always something to do anything whatever in the most perfect and extreme way in which it can be done. Prince LUCIEN BONAPARTE appears to us to be carrying the delights of literary leisure to their highest point. It is not easy to be engaged in a literary work, and yet abstain entirely from the vulgarity of making some contribution to literature. And yet any notion of work spoils the notion of leisure. In the days of the Irish famine, there was a gentleman who offered a starving Irishman eighteenpence a day to make a hole six feet every way, fill it up again, and then remake it. The Irishman gave up at the end of the second day. He could not, although he was hungry, go on for ever at work that was no work—at an occupation that, so far as results went, was perfect leisure. But a prince has a soul equal to the task. Prince LUCIEN will do the thing perfectly. He will fill up his hole in Durham and dig it again in Yorkshire, without the slightest reluctance.

If we consider this translation of the Song of Solomon as the acme of literary pastime, we find it perfect in three great points. In the first place, there is no hurry about finishing it. No publisher, no public, will be urgent to see the task complete. There is no reason, except the shortness of human life, why a year should not be devoted to the translation of each verse. Nor will the value of the production be diminished if the translation is half finished. Half of the Song of Solomon in the Durham dialect is surely as good as the whole. This is an excellence which would attach to hardly any other undertaking which the Prince could have set himself. If he had attempted any more ordinary work, although he might have been free from the miseries of booksellers and the impatience of readers, he would still have been tormented by the wish not to leave undone what he had begun. But the beauty of translating the Song of Solomon into the Durham dialect is, that it makes no difference whether the whole of it is done, or half, or none. Supposing one day the Prince translates a verse, nothing is gained; suppose the next day he takes a holiday, nothing is lost. In the first great requisite of a task of literary leisure—the absence of any motive or cause of hurry—the translation proposed by the Prince is unexceptionable.

In the next place, there is a subdued and mild irony about the work which has its pleasant side. Of course there is nothing wrong in translating any portion of the Bible into any dialect of human speech, and yet we cannot forget that the Song of Solomon has been the theme of a great controversy among commentators. Some have thought that the woman to whom it is addressed is simply a Jewish maid—others think she is allegorical of the Church. We do not know to which side of the dispute Prince LUCIEN leans; but let us suppose, as is probable, that he sees great difficulties in adhering unreservedly to either. Is there not something comic in a person who doubts whether the damsel of the song is or is not allegorical, appealing to her in a phrase which Mr. BROWNE'S authority assures us is pure Yorkshire? "Cum whoam, telle'; cum whoam." There is a sort of slight put on the commentators in their researches, their Dryasdust interpretations, and their mysterious symbolism, by using this language; and yet, as it is good Yorkshire, and is a recognized form of human speech, no one can quarrel with the Prince for using it. It must give a lazy man fine feelings of passing satisfaction to think of the game he is thus playing so innocently. He gets lifted into an easy sense of superiority. That the commentators are only shadowy people, far off, and really unconnected with him, is quite in keeping with the true source of his enjoyment. To gratify a faint malice for absent people, to poke a sort of ghost of fun at the outside world, is about as strong an excitement as is compatible with the languid inactivity of the real literary lotus-eater.

Lastly, there is an isolation about translating the "Song of Solomon" into the dialects of Northern England which must suit the wayward fancies of a literary recluse. To all very useless labor something of solitude must necessarily attach. There is not much interference on the part of the world in an occupation by which the world cannot possibly benefit. But this translation of the "Song of Solomon" takes us a little further than this. We have tried to recollect the nearest approach to Prince LUCIAN'S production in point of utter uselessness that we have ever seen, and we can find none nearer than a translation made by a clergyman of the whole of Samson Agonistes into bad Greek iambics. The author had gone steadily through the whole poem, doing the dialogue into such iambics, and the choruses into such anapæsts, as are done by a conscientious but stupid boy of sixteen. This was useless; but its uselessness fell far short of that of Prince LUCIAN'S translation. For the clergyman might have been a tutor, and have done the translation in order to practice himself; and boys set to translate the Agonistes might put the clergyman's version to a use—bad, but still a use—and crib from it; or a better scholar might derive from reading it the pleasure of thinking how much better he could have done it. But there are no such purposes to which the Yorkshire "Song of Solomon" can be turned. No one can wish to steal from it, no one can wish to surpass it. The translator is absolutely cut off from all sympathy and rivalry while translating it. This work cannot be of the smallest or most indirect use to any one. He is isolated; he is placed apart from the hopes and fears, the good and the bad wishes, of mankind. What other literary occupation can fancy paint in which this solitary uselessness would be so complete and so inevitable?

There is a reproach cast on authors of all kinds—and on those generally who devote their hours to literature—that they are grubs, bookworms, miserable, incapable pedants. The authors of the present day seem inclined to avoid this reproach by proclaiming themselves athletes, bravos and sporting men. It is only by an accident and under protest that they drop the sword or the fowling-piece to take the pen and use the ink. We cannot recognize the absolute truth of either representation of literary life. Perhaps the latter is nearer reality than the former. According to these fancies, persons engaged in literature seem to us to enjoy and amuse themselves much like other people. But we do not believe that the special notion of an author has ever really sprung from the conduct of authors by profession, or, if ever sprang from this source, it would long ago have died away, if it had not been recruited from a very different region. It is the man of literary leisure who gives a tangible form to the popular impression of an author. It is the man who is deeply immersed in books, and who can afford to be occupied about them in a way that do no possible good to any human being, that realizes our highest conception of literary pedantry. No poor man—no merely literary man—would think of translating the Song of Solomon into the Durham dialect. But this is within the scope of the magnificent inutility of a prince. Thus not only does Prince LUCIAN enjoy, in the highest degree, a literary leisure which is free from hurry, has the zest of irony, and inspires a sense of solitude, but, in the language of his imperial relation, he embodies and represents a great idea—that of utterly fruitless and purposeless authorship.

Summer Fashions in France.

From a Paris Correspondent.

Coquetry is in nowise disposed to sacrifice any of its rights during any of the great heats, which have reached a climax almost unheard of in these temperate regions. It is absolutely impossible to have recourse to anything but the lightest fabrics, so necessity, mother of invention, has come to the rescue with a beautiful substance called grénadine guaze, which is so aërial in texture that it reminds one of the impalpable garments mentioned by the ancient poets. Although the grénadine is so thin, yet it is designed en soie broché; sometimes the pattern only consists of a square, indicated by a single thread, and in the square is placed a spot of two colors, or two shades of the same color. The grounding is always white, and the skirts are full and flounced—a bouillon between each flounce. A full bodice, à la vierge, is completed by a little fichu of the same material, which is crossed in front and pointed at the back. All around it are two flounces, and the ends disappear in the waist-ribbon, which is very wide, either plain or plaid. Mousseline de soie cannot compete with this new material, and embossed and woven goods are preferred to anything that can be printed.

There is some change in morning dresses, as piqué is too heavy this sultry weather. Unbleached foulard de l'Inde makes a charming casaque for déshabille; it is also employed in a new costume, consisting of a full and long skirt plaited in at the waist and a Zouave jacket, loose-fitting, without sleeves. Under the jacket is worn a full chemise, in French cambric or muslin, reaching high up to the throat, with ballon sleeves closed at the wrist. This toilette is rendered elegant if the jacket is braided and the chemise ornamented with insertion and finished by very narrow lace at the throat. The same kind of dresses are made in unbleached batiste, a stuff which washes admirably, and is consequently much used for children. When turned to this juvenile account, colored braids are used for embroidering. This is a distinction which ought to be observed.

White dresses, the only real things for Summer, keep their ground; they admit of no novelty except in the way of trimming. Muslin and tarlatan skirts are generally covered with small flounces, and several fashionable ladies have appeared of an evening with their flounces in rows of threes, and between each set were frills of pink, blue, or green taffetas, so full that they looked like plaited ruches. Similar frills were arranged at the top of the sleeves, to look like epaulets, and the whole was completed by a very wide taffetas sash, the ends of which were flounced. The band part of a sash was never worn so narrow as at present, but the ends are graduated until at the bottom they are extremely wide. The dress we have just described would do for a ball if it were made of tulle, and gauze ribbon substituted for taffetas. A full berthe must be added, crossing in front.

The handsomest things for out-door wear are made of gros de Tours or of taffetas, the inner side of which is striped with white and black. The prevailing shape is the Talma, with a ruche one color over another all round, making a framework. Chesnut, blue and gray gros de Tours are very distinguished, but they catch the dirt and show the dust. Black, so fashionable as an accessoire, is not used for dresses this season by les femmes comme il faut. Downward stripes, checks and spots called mignonnettes are all the rage. These patterns are even finding their way on the bonnets, and for this purpose the pattern of the dress is reproduced in white crêpe. However, ladies who pique themselves on their good taste, always have a new bonnet to go with every dress, excepting for negligée, when they wear white straw.

Appeal to the British Methodists on American Slavery.

The Leeds Mercury publishes an "Appeal" from the American Wesleyans to their brethren in Great Britain and "to all members of the great Wesleyan family throughout the world." It is signed by 238 Wesleyan ministers, and we are informed by our American friends that had time and circumstances permitted it to be sufficiently circulated, the signatures of upwards of 2,000 might easily have been obtained. The 238 ministers whose signatures it bears are the representatives of upwards of 42,000 members—a fact of itself sufficiently weighty to secure the earnest attention of British Wesleyans.

The following is the document in question, slightly abridged:

"To all Members of the Great Methodist Family, affiliating with the Methodist Episcopal Church throughout the world.

BELOVED BRETHREN IN CHRIST: The undersigned ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States of America would respectfully represent:

"That at an early day in our history as a church slaveholders were tolerated among us as members: that the practice had become so common that in 1844 one of our bishops was found to be a slaveholder—that a resolution requesting him not to officiate as bishop till that impediment was removed, caused a division of the original Methodist Episcopal Church of 1845: and that, notwithstanding that division, the Methodist Episcopal Church (that is the Northern division of the original church) is still deeply involved in the sin and shame of slaveholding. We have thousands of slaveholders yet in the church—trustees, stewards, leaders, and local preachers, and even traveling preachers have become slaveholders in several instances, and are such still, with but little disapprobation, as a general thing, on the part of the Conferences to which they belong. Such is our present connection with this terrible crime against humanity.

The undersigned, and tens of thousands in the private membership of our church, feel that these things are wrong in the sight of God—a disgrace to Methodism and our common Christianity, and a stumbling-block to unbelievers. We therefore feel that it is our bounden duty to secure, if possible, at the next session of our General Conference, which takes place at Buffalo, N. Y., (U. S.,) May 1, 1860, a disciplinary rule, by which all slaveholders shall be declared ineligible to membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Slavery is deeply cursing our nation, and its malign influence is not less deadly upon the Church of God; and we feel it to be our duty, as much as in us lieth, to remove this curse, and to wipe away this reproach from the otherwise pure escutcheons of our common Methodism. * * We need, however, all the moral influence we can command, in order to a successful termination to our labors.

To you, therefore, we appeal, sons and daughters of the Wesleys, under God, in all lands, and of every subordinate name! Will you not cast the weight of your influence into the scale of humanity and justice in the approaching contest? You can exert a powerful influence for good upon the next General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in these United States. And is there not a moral propriety in your so doing? Every Methodist on the globe is disgraced by the slaveholding that is now tolerated in the Methodist Episcopal Church; and you have all a right to speak, and, if need be, to remonstrate, in earnest and unequivocal language, in behalf of our common Methodism and Christianity.

We appeal to you, therefore, in this fearful hour, and we hope, final struggle against Slavery in the Methodist Episcopal Church, to help us, by sending memorials or deputations to the General Conference of 1860. And we entreat those honored bodies, in England and in Canada, who have heretofore favored us with deputations at our quadrennial session, if need be, to instruct their future delegates to give, while among us, an unequivocal voice of freedom, and against oppression in the Church of our Lord Jesus Christ.

To all regular bodies of Methodists in England, and Australia and Canada, and the West Indies, who may not send delegates to our approaching General Conference, we say: Men of Israel, help! May we not hear your voice with ours, in the form of memorials to our next General Conference? This would greatly strengthen the hands of the enemies of Slavery in this land, and could not fail to hasten the day of the Church's purification from this great sin.

Memorials should be addressed, 'General Conference of the M. E. Church, to be held at Buffalo, N. Y., May, 1860, care of the Rev. H. MATTISON, New-York, U. S. A.'

Copies of this appeal were forwarded by the Leeds Young Men's Anti-Slavery Society to the Methodist New Connection Conference, recently held in Manchester, when the following resolution was adopted by that body:

"That a memorial be sent to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, New-York, United States, (May 1, 1860,) earnestly entreating our brethren to purify their church, by ceasing to hold communion with slaveholders." (See minutes of said Conference, p. 48.)

The appeal is also to be forwarded to the Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist Free Church, now assembling at Sheffield, together with a memorial from the Leeds Young Men's Anti Slavery Society, respectfully urging it on the attention of that association.

It has been sent from America direct to the Wesleyan Conference now assembling at Manchester, and we trust that influential body will cordially respond to the appeal made to them. The American Church has long been considered the bulwark of American Slavery; but we confidently anticipate that at no distant day she may herself break down the bulwark of oppression, and stand forth in her true character, the emblem of liberty and the defender of the weak and helpless.

THE WOOL TRADE.

DOMESTIC MARKETS.

In New-York, during the past week, there has been less activity in all kinds of Wool. Manufacturers, having been previously well supplied, have not purchased freely. The demand from dealers has been also restricted. The receipts have been liberal, comprising 2,199 bales Domestic, and 1,317 bales Foreign. The available supplies are increasing. The principal holders, however, manifest no lack of confidence. Encouraged by the satisfactory result of the Fair at Cleveland, and the favorable advices from England, they are not pressing their stocks on the market; nor are they disposed to make any important concessions to buyers. We have heard of sales of 115,000 lbs. Domestic Fleece, at 35c.@55c. for native to full blood, with some very choice at 58c.@63c.; 50,000 lbs. Domestic Pulled at from 30c.@50c. for No. 1 to extra; 75,000 lbs. very inferior to fine California at from 10c.@32c; 100 bales Texas within a range of from 13c.@25c. for unwashed and washed mixed fleeces, and 24c.@45c. for unwashed and washed Merinos; a lot of washed Peruvian at 24c.@25c., and 30 bales Cape at 40c. ₱ lb....In Boston, during the week, the demand was brisk at full rates, with sales of 100,000 lbs. domestic fleece and pulled, 80 bales Mediterranean, 250,000 lbs. Cape, and 106,000 lbs. African, Chilian, and other kinds....In Providence, sales were made of 21,500 lbs. domestic fleece at 40s.@55c.; 800 lbs. do., pulled, at 50c, and 6,500 lbs. foreign at 18c.@39c. ₱ lb....In Philadelphia, the demand was good at rather firmer prices, with sales of 100,000 lbs. domestic, including 25,000 lbs. common and three-quarter blood at 37½c.@51c.; 3,000 lbs. three quarter blood at 45½c.@50c.; 3,000 lbs. half-blood at 45c.; 3,000 lbs. half and three-quarter blood at 50c; 40,000 lbs. quarter blood at 42c @54c.; 5,000 lbs. common at 37½c, cash, ₱ lb....In Baltimore, Richmond and Pittsburgh, sales were unimportant; and prices unaltered....In Troy, N. Y., a good inquiry prevailed and sales were made of 50,000 lbs. at prices ranging from 43c.@54c. ₱ lb....At Detroit, there were received 211,567 lbs., and shipped 400 bales and 154,407 lbs. during the week. Buyers have generally ceased to operate and all the Wool has been marketed, save a few large lots held for higher prices. The total amount of the clip of Michigan for the season has been variously estimated at from 3,500,000 lbs. to 4,000,000 lbs. and by some even more. This, at an average price of 42½c. would produce a sum equal to $1,487,000, or, if the larger amount, $1,700,000. ....At Chicago, the week's receipts were 82,184 lbs., and shipments, 97,540 lbs. Some common to three-quarter blood fleece brought 32c.@42c. ₱ lb. Nearly all the clip of Illinois is now in the hands of dealers and manufacturers....The Wool clip of Wisconsin has reached, this season, one million of pounds, estimated by the Milwaukee Sentinel, thus: "400 000 lbs., purchased by Milwaukee buyers; 449,000 lbs., purchased by Eastern buyers and others; 80,000 lbs. in the hands of home manufacturers; 80,000 lbs., still in the hands of producers; total, 909,000 lbs. This statement includes only the purchases of the principal operators, and all with whom we have spoken on the subject agree that it falls short at least 100,000 lbs. of the full clip of the State. The average price paid is variously estimated at from 39c.@42

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The Arabia, as announced in yesterday's TIMES, arrived at Boston on Wednesday night. The mails were forwarded by the morning train over the New-Haven road, and reached this City at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon. There is nothing new to add to the telegraphic summary dispatched from Sackville, but we give elsewhere interesting details from our English and Continential files, together with our own correspondence from various points.

The steamship Fulton, from Southampton on the 27th ult., arrived at this port yesterday. Her news, of course, is anticipated by the Arabia.

The United States Mail steamship Star of the West, from Aspinwall on the night of the 2d inst., with the California mails and treasure list of July 20, arrived at this port last night. The Opposition steamship North Star, which left Aspinwall on the 3d inst., arrived early yesterday morning. The amount of treasure brought by the Star of the West is upwards of a million and a half. The California news, which has principally been anticipated by the Overland Mail, and by the steamers from Minatitlan, at New-Orleans, is of very little importance. We publish from the Bulletin an interesting statement of facts relative to the missing bark Messenger Bird, which turned up at Tahiti about the middle of May last.

By these arrivals we have received letters and papers from the Isthmus to the 3d inst. A revolutionary movement is reported to have taken place at Carthagena and to have been temporarily successful—more, however, through the laxity of the authorities than through the sympathies of the people. President OSPINA is too popular to be put down by such a proceeding; and the rising, in all probability, will not extend beyond Carthagena. The excitement about the Chiriqui gold discoveries continues undiminished.

Advices from the Sandwich Islands indicate that the new Treaty with the French Government, which was soon to go into effect, had become more and more distasteful to the Government and people. The objections to the Treaty have been heretofore pointed out in the TIMES. Under the pretence of acquiring new commercial advantages, the agent of France has secured concessions from KAMEHAMEHA which, it is believed, put the final acquisition of the Sandwich Islands by France beyond all doubt, reducing it simply to a question of time.

An arrival from Yucatan at New-Orleans, brings intelligence that the war of the races still continues unabated. The Indians were threatening general depredations.

A Railroad Convention, consisting of delegates representing the roads on the Southwestern and Middle route between Washington and New-Orleans, commenced its session in Washington yesterday. Their business is with reference to the transportation of the mail between Portland and New-Orleans, for which a joint bid is to be made, and to make a uniform arrangement concerning the general passenger and freight business. They expect to be able to convey the mail between New-Orleans and New-York in three and a half days.

The friends of the late HORACE MANN held a meeting yesterday in Boston, to pay a tribute of respect to his memory, and to take measures for the erection of a monument at Mount Auburn—to carry out which latter purpose a Committee was appointed. It was announced that a fund of $20,000 had already been invested for the benefit of Mr. MANN's children.

A very destructive fire occurred in Cincinnati early on Thursday morning, the loss by which is estimated at $200,000. It broke out in a wholesale liquor store, which, with the stock, was entirely destroyed, as well as several adjacent establishments of a like character. The falling walls injured several firemen.

The Ohio Anti-Slavery Convention of Clergymen yesterday adjourned sine die, after passing a series of resolutions, and appointing a Standing Committee for the State at large.

The Board of Aldermen held a special session last evening to make preparations for the reception of the Richmond Grays. Resolutions of welcome were adopted, and Aldermen ADAMS, TUOMEY, PECK, OWENS and LYNES were appointed a Committee of Reception. The Mayor sent in several unimportant vetoes which took the usual course.

The Board of Councilmen last night passed a resolution concurring with the Board of Aldermen, extending to the Richmond Grays a cordial welcome to the City. A Committee was appointed to make preparations for their welcome in due form.

Yesterday, sales were reported of 850 bales Cotton, at uniform quotations. Flour was more active, but most kinds were cheaper. Wheat was quiet. Corn was in fair demand, and was firmer. Rio Coffee was very active, the sales comprising 14,955 bags, privately and by auction, at rather better prices. Sugars attracted less attention. A fair business was transacted in Pork, but at declining rates. Beef and Lard were quiet. Molasses, Rice, and Whisky, were in moderate demand. The Freight engagements were not extensive.

The House of Representatives.

Such is the present state of political parties that the nomination of more than two Presidential candidates, next year, is an event more than likely to happen. It may be assumed as a certainty. WISE assures Mr. DONNELLY, and Mr. DONNELLY has not kept the luminous communication very strictly under his private bushel, that, in case DOUGLAS shall manage to obtain the Charleston nomination, the South will run a nominee of its own, and none who know anything of the Virginia Governor's fighting qualities can for a moment doubt that, rather than permit the friends of Congressional intervention to suffer detriment for lack of a suitable candidate, he would himself bear their banner in his own valiant hands. In such a contingency, several Southern States would unquestionably vote against the Little Giant, and thus preclude the possibility of his success.

On the other hand, the Opposition is not altogether a unit. It has aspirants popular and powerful, who, nevertheless, could not unite all its strength, and the selection of a candidate able to perform that great feat of conciliation and harmony is felt to be a most difficult problem. A possibility exists, therefore, that there may be two nominees in opposition to the Charleston ticket, and the happening of one or both the above-mentioned contingencies is made all the more probable by the notorious decline of National Conventions in the public regard.

That the election may come into the House of Representatives is, therefore, to be kept in view as among the easy possibilities of the campaign, and accordingly it is worth while to inquire what the chances of the respective parties would be in that body.

There are thirty-three States: of these, seventeen is the smallest number which is a majority. The successful candidate in the House must, therefore, unite in his support seventeen delegations. Twenty-seven States have already chosen their representatives, and of these the Democrats have nine only, while the Opposition count seventeen. In the late Congress five of the six yet to elect were represented by Democratic delegations, and one (Maryland) was divided. Allowing all these to the Democrats they will have only fifteen—two less than the requisite number of States. So that the choice of a Democratic President, by the House of Representatives, is already out of the question.

We have seldom seventeen States to the Opposition, which is the full number necessary by the Constitution to elect. But the case of that party is by no means free from difficulties. In this number Tennessee, Illinois and Oregon are included. Will they all—will Tennessee, for example—vote for a Republican of the Massachusetts, New-York or Ohio stamp? And, if she will not, the magic number is broken.

It is a long day before the question can come to a practical test, and many things will happen before February, 1861. Yet, we repeat, it is quite within the bounds of Constitutional possibility that the lower House of the Thirty-sixth Congress may be required to select from the three candidates having the highest number of electoral votes the next President of the United States.

Our Anglo-Mainiacs,

If it were allowable to apply a metaphorical expression to so flat a fact as the State of Maine, we might express a fear that that sterile commonwealth is gradually drifting into the fruitful arms of England. Possessed with the idea that to be English in manner, appearance and feeling, is to be dignified and respectable, the inhabitants of the Lumber State, and especially of the City of Portland and the enterprising villages in the vicinity, have recently taken to "mutton-chop" whiskers, peg-top trowsers, all-rounder collars, brown wide-awakes, and an epidemic of Regent-streetianism generally. Mainiac captains may be heard occasionally in our insurance offices objecting to a classification of their ships below the grade of New-York vessels, and adopting in their remonstrances a composite Corinthian style of accent, in which a sharp ear may detect the preponderance of the Cockney drawl over the Down-East twang. It has been said also that at the meeting of the Historical Society held in Brunswick last week, several of the speakers made themselves glorious by adopting what is vulgarly supposed to be the pure English treatment of the letter H, reversing their aspirates, and trifling with their w's like Wiscount Williams himself. We of course cannot vouch for the correctness of this rumor, but it gains a color of truth from the information which now reaches us, that the object of the Brunswick meeting was to take into consideration a proposition for the celebration of the hundredth anniversary of the capture of Quebec by the British.

What Maine is to Quebec, or Quebec to Maine, is a question which of course concerns the respective populations of those interesting localities much more than it does the rest of mankind, and the sympathetic feeling here alluded to may, after all, arise only from considerations of trade and barter. But it is fearful to think what an amount of celebration New-York would have to undergo if questions of trade were to render such performances necessary here. For example, the City of New-York does annually with the Empire of Brazil, business to an amount sufficient for the purchase of most of the cultivated and arable portions of the State of Maine, and quite sufficient in any two years to include in such an operation a very fair slice of the city of Quebec. Yet nobody here dreams of celebrating the expulsion of the French from Brazil, or the abdication of the first DOM PEDRO and the establishment of the native Empire under the second monarch of that name. We reserve our manifestations for American exploits, and indeed are not over enthusiastic even on those occasions. We have come to regard Saratoga as a mere watering place, and Stony Point as a point of view only. When, therefore, we find Maine so ebullient over the death of WOLFE, we cannot repress the fear that next year may witness a conclave of Cockney Yankees held in Brunswick, to consider the propriety of celebrating Waterloo.

The fact is, that Maine appears to have had her head completely turned by the honor of the proposed visit of the Leviathan steamship to Portland. Scarcely able to stand up under the distinction of having that port selected as a station for British steamers, bringing merchandise from England for Canada, the good people of the flourishing little Yankee town, literally glorifying themselves by reason of their much water, have become quite water-drunk at the idea of the largest steamship in the world coming to their piney shores—and in their admiration of the mighty nation, whose Summer carriers to Canada they have in some measure become, they are ready to lavish honors on all Britons, past, present and future. We shall not be astonished, indeed, to see them propose a barbacue to Boadicea. It is, perhaps, a little spiteful to remind the Portlanders that it is not so much for the sake of Maine as for the benefit of Canada that English steamers are sent to Portland; but it may be only seasonable to remark that if Maine should ever show any serious desire to become a British Province, she will probably find her sister States as indifferent to the loss as stolid England will be to the gain of the transfer.

The Railroad Culvert at Ballston.

We have received from the Superintendent of the Rensselaer and Saratoga Railroad the following very satisfactory certificate in relation to the solidity and safety of the Culvert at Ballston. Our correspondent "T. B. H.," appears to have been correct as regards the appearance of the culvert; but notwithstanding its unsafe look competent inspectors have pronounced it in a perfectly sound condition, which will be sufficient to reassure the traveling public.

State of New-York, County of Rensselaer, ss.—ORIS G. CLARK and HORACE T. CASWELL, of the City of Troy, in said county, being each duly sworn, doth each for himself depose and say:

That he is a mason and master builder, residing in said city; that he is not in any way interested in or in the employ of the Rensselaer and Saratoga Railroad Company; that on the 9th August, inst., he was requested by the officers of said Company to make an examination of a double culvert, mentioned in an article published in the NEW-YORK TIMES of said date, and to report if any defect existed therein.

That on the 10th August, inst., he made a minute and critical examination thereof; that the arch way of said culvert is about seventy-five feet in length, and the openings about twenty feet in width; that the bed of said railroad is in full about ten feet in width.

That the two stone faces or wings, constructed to prevent the sliding of the earth of the embankment, are in some places cracked and out of the perpendicular; that said faces or wings do not affect the strength of said culvert, and are not necessary or intended to support the bed of said railroad; that said culvert is, as to its strength, perfect, and not only amply sufficient to sustain any train which passes over the same, but of sufficient strength to support any weight which could be placed upon the bed of said railroad; and that the same is as strong as when erected about twenty-five years ago, and stronger and safer than any iron or wooden bridge which could be built.

O. G. CLARK,
H. T. CASWELL.

Severally subscribed and sworn to before me this 11th day of August, 1859. MILES BEACH,
Commissioner of Deeds, Troy, N. Y.

State of New-York, City of Troy, Rensselaer County, Clerk's Office, ss.—I, JOHN P. BALL Clerk of said county, and also Clerk of the Supreme, County and Mayor's Courts, being Courts of Record held therein, do hereby certify that MILES BEACH before whom the annexed affidavit was made, and whose name was thereto subscribed, was, at the day of the date thereof, a Commissioner of Deeds in and for the city aforesaid, dwelling in said city, duly commissioned and sworn, and that his signature thereto subscribed is genuine.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed the seal of said county, at is 11th day of August A. D., 1859. JOHN P BALL Clerk.

The above-named CLARK and CASWELL are two of the best mechanics in Troy, and men of tried integrity and judgment in their profession, and implicit reliance may be placed on their statement.

England and Europe.

In the Journal des Débats of Saturday, July 23, M. PREVOST-PARADOL, a leading journalist of Paris, published an article on England and Europe, which deserves special attention, not less from the character and ability of the writer than from the well-known proclivities of the Débats in favor of the Anglo-French alliance and of English institutions. The habitual sneer at a "chained and venal Press" with which the London journalists since their own still comparatively recent emancipation from the control of an official censorship, have been accustomed to receive French opinions upon the position and conduct of England, cannot in this instance be indulged. M. PREVOST-PARADOL, an intimate personal friend of GUIZOT, and a staunch opponent of the Napoleonic rule in France, has won repeated acknowledgments of his candor, his capacity and his high priciple from the most severely Anti-Gallican members of the London Press. Possibly, in their past praises of M. PARADOL these gentlemen may have been inspired almost as much by hatred of the Emperor, whose service the young Parisian writer had declined to enter, as by admiration of his own noble qualities. But, be this as it may, whether they loved PARADOL the more, or NAPOLEON the less, they have done justice to the fearless censor, whose thoughtful strictures upon the actual attitude of England we now reproduce. No English periodical has been more steadily scurrilously hostile to the French Emperor than the London Saturday Review, and no one has taken more pains to secure a hearing in England for M. PREVOST-PARADOL. In commenting upon a volume of Essays recently issued by M. PARADOL, the Review thus spoke of their author:

"It is not easy for a French journalist to acquire a high reputation in these days. To be honest and brilliant is a dangerous combination of merits under the Empire. M. PREVOST-PARADOL is, we believe, the only author who has gained a place in the first rank of French periodical writers since the days of freedom which formed the intellects and animated the style of the remarkable band of journalists whose influence was so great during the time of LOUIS PHILIPPE. Nor was there any one, even in those days of the glory of journalism, who surpassed M. PREVOST-PARADOL in the qualities which please Englishmen in French journalists. Perhaps in France it may be reckoned a fault, but Englishmen cannot but relish that which is the most distinguishing characteristic of M. PREVOST-PARADOL'S writings—their great resemblance, in the general cast of thought they display to the best writings of the best English writers. There is, in all his productions, a constant contempt expressed for the vague grandiloquence which Frenchmen so often affect, as if they had the duty intrusted to them of putting the secret of the universe into short, stilted paragraphs. There is a constant endeavor to ascertain exactly how far a proposition can be hazarded within the limits of truth, and to adhere rigorously to what may be said with a reasonable confidence that it is true. There is a good-natured fault-finding with the countrymen of the writer for the absurdities of thought into which they run one after another, like a flock of sheep. All this has an English air, if we contrast with it the compositions of the writers who have carried the extravagances of French journalism to the utmost. It is only in style that M. PREVOST-PARADOL is thoroughly French."

The Review then analyses one or two of the more purely witty papers in the volume, and continues:

"But there is a large portion of the volume now published by M. PREVOST-PARADOL which is of a very different character, and contains an exposition of a political creed to which the writer clings with sincere devotion. At the beginning of the volume is printed an essay on Parliamentary government, which serves as a prelude to all the subsequent articles, as they only carry out the proposition which in the opening essay the author has sought to establish. This introductory essay is simply a recapitulation of the reasons why M. PREVOST-PARADOL thinks that some form of free government is a necessity in France, and why he rejects the arguments that are current to show that Parliamentary government is bad in itself and specially unfit for Frenchmen. To Englishmen all that he says is familiar; and we can derive no other pleasure from the essay than that of seeing what is old to us well put and skilfully arranged to meet the tastes and views of Frenchmen. In no French writer of the present day is there a more noble interest in the welfare of his country and a more genuine concern for the moral greatness of France than in M. PREVOST-PARADOL. Few Frenchmen, again, are so well acquainted with England and with everything English. He really is too English for English readers; for he praises England so heartily, and tests French institutions so constantly by an English standard, that we have not so much to learn from him as if he represented a little more strongly the peculiarities of his countrymen."

We may hope, therefore, that the Review will lay well to heart and urge its countrymen well to ponder the faithful, close and scathing analysis of England's part in the recent war; and of that shameful doctrine of a sham neutrality under which her Conservatives have manœuvred and her Liberals taken shelter just long enough to precipitate a shabby and incomplete solution of the gravest European question of our times.

M. PARADOL writes:

"England has just caused a strange surprise not to Europe only, but to those statesmen who fancied they knew her best, to those among her great citizens who thought they were perfectly certain to lead her. For the first time perhaps in her history she has allowed a great war to commence and continue, a re-arrangement of territory to be announced and accomplished not only without taking part in it, but with the firm resolution of having nothing to do with it. She has imposed this resolution on her statesmen; she has watched them with jealous attention, lest they might be tempted to disobey her; she has forbidden them to entertain the slightest intention of mixing up with this conflict the name and arms of the English people; and so well has she succeeded in this difficult design, that the war was brought to a close, and peace reëstablished in Europe, without England's taking any greater part in it than Portugal or Denmark.

The ministers who, true to the tradition of their country, formed a different idea of her interests and duties, no more succeeded in moving her than Don Quixote did in carrying off that celebrated wooden horse on which he fancied he could travel through the vast fields of air. It was in vain they let off crackers near the peaceful animal, and put squibs under his tail; nothing stirred his inflexible immobility, and after all this alarum he found himself in the same place as at first. But the question is, whether England finds herself, at the end of this episode, in the same place as at the beginning, and whether she comes out of this trial as intact as Don Quixote's steed.

First of all let us inquire what were the chief causes of England's taking so new and decided an attitude in the great crisis we have just passed through. Above all, it was that increasing disgust for war, which in the Nineteenth Century is both the glory and the weakness of civilized communities. It must be admitted that England never manifested greater repugnance to war, or greater attachment to peace, than during the first months of this year. It is not only—as people are too fond of saying, the immense development of material interests, that makes nations, when they have the control of their own destinies, so slow to have recourse to arms; it is a general sentiment of humanity; it is a greater respect for human life, a livelier consciousness of the manifold evils brought about by war, and the responsibility attaching to those who let loose such a scourge upon the world without absolute necessity. If these ideas exercise at the present day a great influence upon the continent itself, if the most warlike nation in the world has felt their constraining power, what action must they not have upon England, laden, as she indeed is, with the most genial blessings of modern civilization, accustomed more and more to internal peace, to labor, order and liberty, and the peaceful enjoyment of the greatest blessings that nature can desire?

Not only are the English inclined in these days to consider war barbarous, but a considerable part of the English public, deeply imbued with Christian ideas, regards it as a sin. They hesitate long, they weigh all the circumstances before admitting this right of drawing the sword, which a short time back gave such little trouble to the conscience of nations or sovereigns. This tolerably numerous portion of the public have come by degrees to apply to the conduct of nations those absolute maxims that constitute the ideal of the Christian life. They do not go so far as to say that the duty of a people, like that of a martyr, is to suffer itself to be immolated, nor even to turn the cheek to the smiter; but they concede to a people nothing beyond the right of defending its existence, and they deny its right of raising itself as formerly, or maintaining itself by arms amidst the recurring conflicts that agitate the world. They have thus invented a sort of catechism for the use of nations that was utterly unknown to ELIZABETH, CROMWELL and PITT, and which LOUIS XIV. and NAPOLEON, if they take an interest about such things in the other world, must bitterly regret not to have seen disseminated and put in practice earlier among the English people.

It would be wrong, however, to attribute solely to the progress of civilization and to the influence of Christian sentiments this attachment of England to peace—this altogether novel passion for a strict neutrality. Pride and contempt, self-esteem and the disdain of others, have a large share in it. Right or wrong, the English public has accustomed itself to regard the greater part of the continental nations as irrevocably devoted to anarchy or slavery, and consequently it takes less interest in their trials or quarrels so long as England's security does not appear to it to be directly threatened. Elated, moreover, by the progress of her race over every part of the globe, by the wonderful development of her new colonies, by the foundation of those distant empires, where her customs, freedom, industry, and all the germs of her own peculiar greatness, live again, together with her language, England has insensibly been led to give to continental nations a less considerable share in her affairs, and to attach less importance to the events that change the face of Europe. She boasted, not long since, of being the first Mussulman power in the world; she is also a great oceanic power, and she is a great American power, and anticipating the future in this part of the globe, she refuses to consider Europe any longer as the sole arena where at all costs she must acquire or preserve the first rank. Less concerned about the progress of her ancient rivals, she is also less jealous of upholding the balance of their power, and of watching their mutual encroachments, and this turn of mind is the more advantageous to her since she finds a pretext therein for sparing herself great sacrifices and vigorous resolutions.

From all these sentiments, good or bad, exalted or selfish, has resulted the conduct of England in the present crisis. The future alone will show whether she has not erred in her instincts and calculations, and whether, in adopting a policy similar to America's, she has not forgotten that it is not the ocean, but merely the Channel, that separates her from a continent filled with soldiers. If the peace party (which in England is the dominant party as the war party is with us)—if the peace party has been right—if it has actually revealed to England the admirable secret of preserving her influence over Europe without taking part in its quarrels, this party has rendered its country an immense service; if, on the contrary, it has been mistaken, if in prematurely disengaging England from her continental ties it has deprived her at the same time too soon of her supports, it has placed in extreme jeopardy not only the greatness of its country, but its very existence.

In fact, the aspect of Europe must awaken now very different feelings in the breast of a Frenchman and in that of an Englishman, and may give to the former as many hopes as to the latter just sources of uneasiness. England can say to herself, 'I have never been much liked upon the Continent; but I was feared there; now they fear me much less, and do not like me more on that account. I had not long since before me a nation powerful and jealous, but isolated and surrounded as it were by my natural allies; now I see in Europe only old enemies who have not pardoned my successes, only old friends who attribute to me their reverses. I was accustomed to fight against one alone, with the help of several; I may have to fight several, and can no longer depend upon the aid of one. Those whom I have left to defend themselves alone would see me without displeasure undergo the same trial, and would calmly represent to me that it is for the general interest to localise the war. What boots it to me if sheltered by my ships I can defy the whole universe? But it is very expensive to have for the future to guard one's self against the whole universe, and incessantly to be in expectation of a great day when all will be saved or lost. Perhaps I was not wrong to have have had formerly allies in the world, and to have accustomed them to depend on me, in order that I myself might depend on them. I have changed my system; the event will teach me if I have done right.' On her side, France can consider Europe with some security, and even some hope; she may say to herself: 'Formerly I could not raise my arm against any one without being immediately forced to parry the blow with another; now, if I have any quarrel of this kind to settle, they will willingly see me at it, and there will be some to applaud me, who formerly would have fought with me. Parcere subjectis is really a great maxim, and I have derived great advantages from it. If I see an occasion or necessity for it, I shall willingly apply the second half of the verse, and shall thereby please everybody. But, whatever may happen here, I am surrounded with old adversaries, to whom I have proved that I possessed rather the power than the wish to injure them, and that I desired less their defeat than their friendship. Let us wait and hope.'

Such is pretty nearly for us and our neighbors the moral of the fable that has just been recited in Europe. This fable is instructive for every one, especially for the philosopher and historian, who love to account for the progress of human affairs; it has a plain grandeur from the extent of the scene, and the importance of the interests at stake there; but it has also a comic side, through the ridicule produced by certain actors. We must not seek to criticise the mysterious Ordainer of our destinies, if being a good prince, and liking sometimes to make us laugh, it pleases him to bestow a part on Messrs. BRIGHT, COBDEN, and some other persons of similar genius, in the events that change the face of the world."

Board of Aldermen.

RECEPTION OF THE RICHMOND GRAYS—STEAM FIRE-ENGINES.

In accordance with a special call, the Board of Aldermen met last evening to make arrangements for the reception of the Richmond Grays. Alderman ADAMS offered the following resolutions:

Whereas, it is understood that the Mayor and some of the members of the Common Council of the City of Richmond, Virginia, are expected to arrive in this City on Saturday, the 13th inst., to be escorted by the Richmond Grays, of said city, who are to be received by a battalion of the Seventh Regiment of New-York; and

Whereas, it is becoming to the dignity of this City that its Representatives, in their corporate capacity, should extend its hospitalities to the authorities of the City of Richmond, when visiting a sister city in numbers, and more especially when escorted by so prominent a volunteer organization of militia; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Mayor and Common Council of the City of New York will most heartily welcome the Mayor and Members of the Common Council of Richmond, Va., and will most cordially extend the hospitalities of the City to them and to their escort.

Resolved, That the sum of $2 500 be and is hereby appropriated to carry the foregoing resolution into effect, which is hereby appropriated therefor.

Resolved, That if the Board of Councilmen concur, that a Committee of Five be appointed by each Board to carry the same into effect.

Alderman ADAMS moved a division of the question which was carried.

He then moved that the preamble be adopted and resolutions be laid over, which was also carried.

The President appointed Aldermen Adams, Tuomey, Peck, Owens and Lynes.

As there was an appropriation of money to be voted on, a division of the question was called for. The preamble was then adopted, and Aldermen Adams, Tuomey, Peck, Owens and Lines were appointed a Committee to receive the visitors.

A number of unimportant vetoes were received from the Mayor. They took the usual course.

A report from the Committee on the Fire Department recommended that the steam fire-engines should be put out of service, on the ground that there was no appropriation to supply them with fuel, fire engineers, &c.

Alderman BRADLEY stated that the Comptroller had informed him that there was $1,500 of the appropriation for the engines still unexpended.

Alderman ADAMS doubted whether this was the fact. The Street Commissioner had alleged there were no funds, and he ought to know.

Alderman BRADY thought it was the Comptroller's business to give information on this subject.

The report was finally recommitted.

On motion of Alderman PECK, the resolution adjourning until the first Thursday of September was reconsidered and the Board adjourned until next Thursday at 5 o'clock.

The Eighth and Fourth Companies of the Seventh Regiment—National Guard—have received orders from Col. Lefferts to extend to the Richmond Grays proper military civilities and a welcome on the occasion of their arrival in this City.

Board of Councilmen.

The Board of Councilmen met last evening at 6 o'clock, fourteen members being present. The President, C. G. CORNELL, was in the Chair.

The only matter of interest transacted was the passage of a preamble and resolution in reference to the visit of the Richmond Greys to this City.

A CANING AFFAIR.—Last evening a gentleman named GEORGE DASHIEL, of Memphis, Tenn., who is stopping at the Metropolitan Hotel, accompanied by a gentleman named NELSON, and his daughter, also of Memphis, Tenn., attended the performances of the Ravel Troupe at Niblo's Theatre. While enjoying the performances, a young man named CHARLES PARISH, clerk in the establishment of LAIDLIN, LEAVITT & Co., was seated near Miss NELSON, and it is alleged that PARISH handed the young lady a card, which she indignantly cast upon the floor. The same thing was repeated, with the same result, when Miss NELSON immediately informed Mr. DASHIEL of the alleged insult. The lady was then escorted to the vestibule, and DASHIEL returned and collared PARISH and administered a severe castigation with a light switch cane. A great crowd immediately assembled, who generally commended DASHIEL for his conduct. A police officer, however, took him into custody, and he was detained at the Fourteenth Ward Station-house, and a complaint made against him by PARISH of assault and battery.

THE ESCAPE OF DE MIRANDA, THE DEFAULTER.—On Wednesday an item appeared stating that a Cuban named AUGUSTUS DE MIRANDA, who had been confined in Eldridge-street jail on a charge of embezzlement, escaped from a special Deputy-Sheriff who had him in custody. It appears that MIRANDA induced the Sheriff to accompany him to a Spanish school in West Forty-fourth-street, where he resided previous to his arrest. When they arrived at the house, MIRANDA took the Sheriff to a back window of the house, and commenced expatiating upon the beauties of the shrubbery and plants in the garden. As the officer became interested, MIRANDA made the remark, "Well, I guess I will step into next room and get a few things to take down to the jail." He left the room, and after the lapse of twenty minutes the officer attempted to go out, but found all the doors locked. The alarm was given; but, of course, MIRANDA was gone. The amount of bail which MIRANDA was unable to procure and was locked up in consequence was $3,000. The jailor has issued a handbill offering the sum of $100 for his re-arrest.

INTERESTING TO POLICEMEN.—One of the regulations of the Police Department requires the members of the force to get their clothing made at certain tailoring establishments. About a dozen tailors are favored with this monopoly of Police custom. Among policemen a good deal of dissatisfaction exists at this regulation, as they are obliged to put up with the kind of cloth furnished, the quality of the work and the prices charged. A trial has just taken place before Justice STEWART, of the Third District Court, where an Eighth-avenue tailor brings a suit against Officer G. S. MCWATERS, of the Fifteenth Precinct, for a balance claimed to be due for a suit furnished him. The officer paid what he deemed the clothing was worth, and the tailor had him brought before the Police Commissioners, who directed the former to pay half the balance claimed. This decision was not satisfactory to the tailor, and he accordingly commenced suit, as stated, before the District Court. The Judge has reserved his decision.

ANOTHER NEW COUNTERFEIT.—Last evening several bills purporting to be five dollar issues on the Merchants' Bank of this City, were passed in the First Ward. The vignette is a train of cars, flanked on one side by the bust of a female, and on the other side by the bust of a man. The bills were afterwards found to be counterfeit. No arrests were made.

As the Orange and Alexandria Railroad to Lynchburgh, and the remaining part of the Mississippi Central Railroad, will be finished by the 1st of January, at which time the next contract is to take effect, these Delegates confidently say they will be able to carry the mails between New-Orleans and New-York in three and a half days. The fire extended to the warehouse occupied by S. N. PIKE, wholesale liquor dealer, and CRANE, BREED & Co., metallic burial case manufacturers, which were partially destroyed. The loss of the former is $30,000; insured for $10,000. Messrs. CRANE, BREED & Co's loss is about $40 000.

CINCINNATI, Thursday, May 11—P. M.

Several firemen were injured by the falling of walls. During the fire the water in the cisterns became exhausted; but for this the destruction of property would have been less.

The origin of the fire is unknown.

DYSPEPSIA! DYSPEPSIA! DYSPEPSIA!
WHAT IS IT? HOW CURED?
Dyspepsia is our national disease—weak stomach, feeble digestion distress after eating, costive habit, bilious condition. How many suffer with it and its at-ndant symptoms of low spirits, bad taste, coated tongue, obstupified head, and attacks of headache! Yet how few know how to cure it! Generally, because the bowels are constipated, resort is had to cathartics or laxatives. But such a condition was never cured by cathartics, whose only office is to weaken the digestion and impair the integrity of the entire assimilative system.

But HUMPHREYS' HOMŒOPATHIC DYSPEPSIA PILLS—a simple medicated sugar pill—have cured hundreds of the worst and most obstinate cases. This is done simply by improving the tone and restoring the integrity of the digestive organs from which result good appetite, regular habits, a clear head and buoyant spirits. Such a medicine is a gem, and only requires to be known to be appreciated.

Price, 25 cents per box with directions. Six boxes $1.

D. APPLETON & CO. PUBLISH ON SATURDAY:

HISTORY OF FRANCE,
FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO MDCCCXLVIII.
By the Rev. JAMES WHITE
Author of the "Eighteen Christian Centuries."
1 vol., 8 vo. Price $2.

This History is believed to be especially adapted to the benefit of general readers who are anxious for historical as well as other kinds of knowledge but who, in respect to the history of France, are repelled from the attempt to acquire it by the dryness of the narrative and the uninteresting style of the smaller volumes devoted to the subject, and by the time and labor required for the perusal of the more extensive and valuable work.

It has had the highest commendation from the British critical press generally.

Speaking of its conciseness and attractive style, the Athenæum says: "Its 600 pages contain every leading incident worth the telling, and abound in word-painting, whereof a paragraph has often as much active life in it as one of those inch-square etchings of the great Callot, in which may be clearly seen whole armies contending in bloody arbitrament, and as many incidents of battle as may be gazed at in the miles of canvas in the military picture gallery at Versailles. * * Especially skillful is Mr. White in the depicting of the great revolutions of France and their consequences.

ALSO,
THE HISTORY OF HERODOTUS.

A new English version, edited with copious notes and appendices, by GEORGE RAWLINSON, M. A., assisted by Col. Sir HENRY RAWLINSON K. C. B., and Sir J. G. WILKINSON, F. R. S. With maps and illustrations. To be completed in four vols. Vol. 1, 8vo $2 50.

The object of this work is to present the English reader with a correct yet free translation, and to collect and methodize the chief illustrations of the author, which modern learning and research have accumulated. Parallel with the progress of the work, a series of fresh discoveries have been made upon its (to us) more important subjects—the ethnography of the East and the history and geography of Babylonia and Assyria. The results of these discoveries up to the latest have been incorporated in the illustrative part of the work—great part of it having been from time to time rewritten, as new light has been thrown upon doubtful points.

This feature together with the labor of scholarship given to the task, renders the work one of the most valuable and erudite of modern publications.

PILES, PILES, PILES.
WHAT IS IT? HOW CURED?
Thousands of persons have Piles—suffer for years with the disease—yet few know what it is or how it is cured. Every case of Piles, whether manifested in the form of external tumors frequent bleedings, or in violent itching, at irritation depends essentially upon congestion of the abdominal venous circulation. This produces the engorgement, dilation of the veins formation of tumors, hemorrhages, pain and suffering; and the disease can only be fundamentally cured by medicines which, taken internally, relieve this abdominal venous congestion. Hence, ointments, washes, and even injections, are so ineffectual.

HUMPHREYS' HOMŒOPATHIC PILE SPECIFIC, a simple sugar pill, taken two or three times per day, cures the disease by curing the condition upon which the disease depends. Hundreds have been cured by it, even of the most obstinate cases. All will be promptly benefited by it. Price 50 cents a box.

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS.—It would hardly do for any one now-a-days to have the temerity to question the excellence of Dr. J. HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH "BITTERS" for all diseases of the stomach. In cases of Dyspepsia, Bodily Weakness, Costiveness, Dysentery, and general derangement of the digestive organs, their many virtues have long since been made plainly apparent. They purge from the system the morbid humors which retard their natural functions, and which bring paleness to the cheek and suffering to the brow. They banish those clogs upon pleasure, restore the system to high health, and necessarily prove a valuable adjunct to the digestive organs. A trial is all that is needed to establish them in the confidence of the skeptic.

For sale by druggists and dealers generally everywhere.

Mr. Rarey Questioned.

One of Mr. RAREY's subscribers writes to the London Times in the following dubious strain:

SIR: I read in the Morning Post of this day that Mr. RAREY had on Saturday last given his last exhibition of horse-taming at the Alhambra, "his engagements with Her Majesty's Government promising in future to occupy the whole of his time."

The Morning Post went on to describe with considerable graphic power the apparent success which Mr. RAREY had had in quelling a certain homicidal cart stallion, and added that the once formidable Cruiser was, as usual, exhibited by him to the audience "as tame as a kitten."

Would it not be well, Sir, that some M. P. should inquire of the Minister of War what the nature of the engagements which have been entered into by Her Majesty's Government with Mr. RAREY is, by whom those engagements have been recommended, and what amount of money he is to receive for them?

Last year I was one of Mr. RAREY's pupils. Binding me to secrecy in a bond of £500, he undertook for a fee of £10 10s. to initiate me into all the mysteries of horse-taming, as practised by him.

And he faithfully fulfilled his agreement. I believe that were I as cool, as determined, as active and as accustomed to horses as he is, I could tame a difficult horse just as well as he could.

And had her Majesty's Government sent half-a-dozen rough-riders to Mr. RAREY to learn his method, and had they paid him sixty guineas for their instruction, they would have paid him all he asked, and I think rather more than his alleged secret was worth.

But, surely, in engaging Mr. RAREY's entire services at a time when everybody knows his secret, and when hundreds of men can practise his method just as successfully as he can, there is something very like a reckless waste of public money.

Mr. RAREY's fame mainly depends on his success with the ferocious Cruiser. We have all heard him explain how that horse, driven wild by unskillful and cruel treatment, had capitulated as soon as Mr. RAREY had made him understand that he wished to be his friend, and how the horse, when he discovered that Mr. RAREY meant him no ill, instantly abandoned all ill intentions towards Mr. RAREY. And on Saturday last, as I have already said, Cruiser was exhibited by Mr. RAREY to an admiring audience at the Alhambra, "as quiet as a kitten."

But I am told, on authority which I cannot doubt, that on the previous Friday, a man, bruised and bleeding, was brought into the accident ward of St. George's Hospital; he had been shockingly worried by a horse. I am told that he now lies there in a most deplorable condition. I am assured that the unhappy sufferer is Cruiser's, "the kitten's," groom, and that he was attacked and worreted by that ferocious animal while attempting to insert into his mouth the heavy wooden gag which has hitherto afforded him the only means of dealing with the dangerous brute in comparative safety.

Four and-twenty hours after this sad occurrence, it appears that Mr. RAREY was expatiating on the conciliatory and pacific disposition of his most promising pupil, to a credulous and most remunerative audience at the Alhambra.

Would it not, I say, be well to know what further sums of money are to go into the horse-tamer's pocket out of ours, and what we are to get for that money more than we have already got?

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

JULY 25. £10 10s.

MISCELLANEOUS.

OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.
PROFESSOR WOOD'S
HAIR RESTORATIVE.

Says the St. Louis (Mo.) Democrat: "Below we publish a letter to Dr. Wood, of this city, from a gentleman in Maine, which speaks glowingly of the superior merits of his hair tonic. Such evidence must have its effect, when coming from a reliable source. If certificates are guarantees of truth, the Doctor needs no encomiums, nor useless puffery from the Press:"

BATH, Maine, Jan. 20, 1858.

PROFESSOR O. J. WOOD & Co.:

Gentlemen: Having my attention called a few months since to the highly beneficial effects of your hair restorative, I was induced to make application of it upon my own hair, which had become quite gray, probably one-third white; my whiskers were of same character. Some three months since I procured a bottle of your hair restorative, and used it. I soon found it was proving what I had wished. I used it about twice a week. I have since procured another bottle, of which I have used some. I can now certify to the world that the gray or white hair has totally disappeared, both on my head and face, and my hair has resumed its natural color, and I believe more soft and glossy than it has been before for twenty five years. I am now sixty years old; my good wife at the age of fifty-two has used it with same effect.

The above notice I deem due to you for your valuable discovery. I am assured that whoever will rightly use, as per directions, will not have occasion to contradict my statements. I am a citizen of this city and a resident here for the last fifteen years, and am known to nearly every one here and adjoining towns. Any use you may make of the above, with my name attached, is at your service, as I wish to preserve the beauties of nature in others as well as myself. I am, truly yours,

A. C. RAYMOND.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 23, 1858.

WOOD'S HAIR RESTORATIVE.

PROFESSOR WOOD—Dear Sir: Having had the misfortune to lose the best portion of my hair, from the effects of the yellow fever, in New-Orleans in 1854. I was induced to make a trial of your preparation, and found it to answer as the very thing needed. My hair is now thick and glossy, and no words can express my obligations to you in giving to the afflicted such a treasure.

FINLEY JOHNSON.

AARONS RUN, Ky., Nov. 30, 1858.

PROFESSOR O. J. WOOD—Dear Sir: I would feertainly be doing you a great injustice not to make known to the world the wonderful, as well as the unexpected result I have experienced from using ONE bottle of your Hair Restorative. After using every kind of Restoratives extant, but without success, and finding my head nearly destitute of hair, I was finally induced to try a bottle of your Hair Restorative. Now, candor and justice compels me to announce to whomsoever may read this that I now possess a new and beautiful growth of hair, which I pronounce richer and handsomer than the original was. I will therefore take occasion to recommend this invaluable remedy to ALL who may feel the necessity of it.

Respectfully yours, REV. S. ALLEN BROCK.

P. S. My testimonial of my approbation for your valuable medicine (as you are aware of) is unsolicited; but if you think it worthy a place among the rest, insert if you wish, if not, destroy and say nothing.

Yours, &c., Rev. S. A. B.

The Restorative is put up in bottles of three sizes, viz.: large, medium and small; the small holds half a pint, and retails for $1 per bottle; the medium holds at least 20 per cent. more in proportion than the small, retails for $2 a bottle; the large holds a quart, 40 per cent. more in proportion and retails for $3 a bot le.

Two men were killed in a tunnel at Butte City, on the 15th. Their names were SAMUEL WHITMORE and HENRY DUNBERWORTH.

A number of State convicts escaped from the schooner William Hicks, at Market-street wharf, on Sunday evening. This vessel was employed in bringing brick from the prison to this city, and arrived with a load on Friday morning. On Saturday afternoon, WM. WINTERS, alias "Brocby," who was one of the convicts, escaped by jumping ashore and running. The others remained and escaped in a body. There are said to have been H. Beecher, Charles Smith, Reynolds, Patterson, (cook,) Harwood, Miller, Mose, Scanlin, Smith, two Spaniards, names not given; a boy, name not given, and Wm. Winters. The schooner was in charge of Capt. AIKEN, and a State Prison guard named BARRY had charge of the convicts, none of whom had as yet been arrested. They were all near the expiration of their sentences, but some of them are desperate villains. These escapes are becoming so frequent that no surprise is manifested any more to hear of them.

WILLIAM C. DAVIS, who was indicted by the Grand Jury of the Court of Sessions, last term, for the murder of a Mr. SHIRLEY at Sonora, on the 23d of March, was tried in Sonora on Tuesday last, when a verdict of not guilty was rendered.

PHILIP SMITH was, on Friday, convicted in Sacramento of murder in the second degree, for killing THOMAS J. RICE.

Some days ago a desperate fight occurred near Auburn, Placer County, between a Sheriff's party and a notorious highwayman, known as "Rattle snake Dick," in which one of the officers was instantly killed, and Dick was wounded. The body of the latter was found the next morning by the roadside about a mile from the scene of the fight. It seems that he had received from one of the officers a mortal wound through the body, but had received his quietus from a bullet through his brain, fired either from his own hand or that of his comrade. He was found lying on a "machera" (the loose leather covering of a Spanish saddle) on a pile of brush, a saddle blanket partly covering him. He had on a pair of kid gloves, in the right hand of which was a slip of paper, on which was scrawled with a pencil the following: "Rattlesnake Dick dies, but never surrenders, as all true Britons do." On the reverse side of the same paper was written: "If J. Boggs is dead, I am satisfied."

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The Treaty Between France and the Hawaiian Kingdom.

The new treaty between France and the Hawaiian kingdom goes into operation on the 8th of September next ensuing. The objectionable points of the treaty, although fully stated nearly a year ago, are worthy of a repetition. The Honolulu Commercial Advertiser thus sums them up:

1. Its great ambiguity must give rise to more or less trouble in all cases of dispute between this and any foreign Government.

2. All its provisions do not apply (except by inference) to the colonies of France in the Pacific, and, therefore, the operation of the treaty must be adjudged partial.

3. Liberty to carry on inter-island traffic in foreign goods, as well as to engage in the inter-island passenger trade in the Hawaiian kingdom, can be claimed by French vessels, without any corresponding benefit to Hawaiian vessels in French territories.

4. In case of a rejection of the "Additional Article," unrestrained liberty to sell liquors to natives, within and without the limits of Honolulu, can be claimed by French subjects.

5. The Hawaiian Government is compelled to the official use of the French language with French subjects, and by parity other foreign languages must be introduced in like manner.

6. The right of a foreign government to interfere in our internal fiscal regulations, is fully yielded as a precedent.

7. The stipulations of the treaty must cause a heavy loss to the Hawaiian Government—estimated to exceed $30,000 per annum.

8. Heavy expenses must be incurred by this Government in supporting revenue guards, stationed on foreign vessels.

9. French whale ships are to be placed on the same footing as Hawaiian, in respect to the importation of their catchings, to the serious loss of the revenue, if the same immunity is demanded by every foreign nation.

10. Extraordinary powers are granted to French Consuls, in the administration on estates of deceased French subjects.

11. All the privileges granted by this treaty to French subjects can be claimed by every foreign government with whom we have a treaty, for its subjects.

12. To sum up all, the treaty recognizes an open violation of our rights as an independent sovereignty; is partial in its operation; exacting and unjust in its demands; a burden to the industry and resources of a weak nation; and a disgrace to the ministry of KAMEHAMEHA IV.

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE RELATIVE TO THE TREATY,

From the Polynesian.

HONOLULU, May 16, 1859,
Mission of France to the Hawaiian Islands.

No. 6. MONSIEUR MINISTER: I had the honor to submit to the Government of the Emperor the additional article dated 4th September last, which I had accepted ad referendum, and which your Government had desired to see added to the Treaty signed on the 29th of October, 1857.

This Treaty, freely consented to by the respective Plenipotentiaries, clothed with the pure and simple ratification of the Emperor on the 20th March, 1858, could not any longer be modified. It is with painful surprise that my Government has seen yours, Monsieur Minister, request successively in 1857 and 1858, either the substitution of their Convention with England for the treaty of the 29th of October, or to subject its ratification to the adoption of an additional article destined to nullify several of the most essential provisions of our last diplomatic act.

The interests of France and of England in the Hawaiian Archipelago are of a different nature; there is the fact, the forgetfulness of which can alone explain the act of the 4th September, 1858.

Thus it is that the 10th article of the treaty of 29th October, which consecrates a principle established in 1839, and maintained in 1846, which renders inapplicable to a Frenchman the law of the 20th June, 1851, renders also inadmissible the first paragraph of the proposed additional act.

So it is also that the second paragraph of the same act which tends to subject France, in regard to the usage of her language in the Hawaiian Islands, to a treatment different from that of England, is equally unacceptable.

The Government of the Emperor does not understand the utility of the provision claimed in the third paragraph of the additional article, since the 17th Article of the Treaty is restrictive, and that it is impossible to deduct from it, by induction, other provisions than those which are there especially determined. Nor can it more admit the radical modifications which the final provision of the fourth paragraph of the same act would consecrate. The intervention of the local authorities in the administration of French inheritances ought to be strictly confined within the limits prescribed by the 20th article of the same Treaty.

The essential object of the 14th Article is to prevent simulations of flag, while that of the fifth paragraph of the additional act is on the contrary to favor them; that difference in the intention of the two contracting parties renders this last paragraph equally inadmissible.

To resume, the requests contained in the additional article of Sept. 4, 1858, are in complete opposition to the letter and spirit of the Treaty itself. They might injure in a notable manner the interests in view of which the negotiation was commenced; it is in consideration of these motives that the Government of the Emperor has charged me to notify yours, Monsieur Minister, that it considers it as impossible to welcome such modifications.

Desirous, notwithstanding, of giving a new evidence of the conciliatory spirit which animates it, my Government has authorized me to declare, here, officially:

1. That the tenth article of the Treaty which maintains the privilege guaranteed to Frenchmen by the Conventions of 1839 and 1846, has not, in any way, for its object, to interfere in the detail of the internal regulations of the trade in wines and liquors in the Hawaiian Islands.

2. That the exemption granted to the Consuls of France by the 17th Article, shall not be extended beyond their appearance before the Courts of Justice as witnesses; and will not excuse them from appearing as parties.

3. That Article 20th ought to be understood in the sense that it does not grant to Consuls, who are engaged in business, the right of administering to successions of intestate persons.

In the view of the Government of the Emperor, this last proof of their moderation authorizes them to hope that no new difficulty will arise on the subject of an act now become definitive by the exchange of ratifications, and which is soon to be promulgated in France, that it may regularly become executory.

This notification closes, so far as I am concerned, the negotiation of the treaty of 29th October, 1857; it renders useless the opening of any new conference the draughting of any new document; I only await, for the official adhesion which I pray you to transmit to me in the name of your Government, Monsieur Minister, to announce to that of the Emperor, that the international engagements reciprocally contracted, are going to be faithfully executed.

Accept the new assurance of the high consideration with which I have the honor to be, Monsieur Minister, your very humble and obedient servant, the Consul Commissioner and Plenipotentiary of H. I. M.,

(Signed) EM. PERRIN.

Monsieur R. C. WYLLIE, Minister of Foreign Affairs, &c., &c., &c., Honolulu.

DEPARTMENT OF FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Honolulu, May 26, 1859.

No. 5. SIR: Having submitted to the King in his Cabinet, and also to his Majesty with his Privy Council of State, your dispatch No. 6, of the 16th inst., I am authorized to reply that the King's Government gives its adhesion to the Treaty of October 29, 1857, and hereby declares its unconditional ratification thereof, without the proposed additional Article, from the 8th day of September, A. D., 1858.

The King's Government understands that in conformity with the wishes of the Imperial Government, expressed through you as their Plenipotentiary, in your said dispatch, the official notification of adhesion now made, closes all negotiations and conferences, at the King's Court, in regard to the said Treaty, which they hope may work practically to the equal honor and advantage of both nations.

I have only to add that I shall ever be willing to cooperate with you to secure that result, so desirable for both countries; and that I pray you to accept the renewed assurances of the high respect and consideration with which I have the honor to be, Sir, your most obedient humble servant.

R. C. WYLLIE.

Monsieur LUIS EMILE PERRIN, Consul, Commissioner and Plenipotentiary of H. I. M. NAPOLEON III., Emperor of the French.

THE INDIA-RUBBER CONTROVERSY.

STATEMENT OF MR. JUDSON'S COUNSEL.

To the Editor of the New-York Tribune:

I find five columns of your paper to-day, occupied by letters from Mr. Day and his counsel, in reply to Mr. Judson's statement published by you some days since; and in the absence of Mr. Judson from New-York, I will take a little space to rejoin for him, as well as for myself, hoping to dispel the mist which all this writing has cast on a very clear subject.

Mr. Judson's statement, indorsed by myself, amounted simply to this: that Mr. Day and he being both claimants of the right to use vulcanized rubber in woven elastic goods, Mr. Day has brought some suits in Baltimore against parties selling such goods, who were common trespassers upon some one's rights; that in the progress of these suits Mr. Day and the defendants agreed to make a case for "final hearing" out of a mass of ex parte affidavits, the contents of which were in part unknown to Mr. Judson or his counsel; that this "final hearing," thus amicably arranged, was had before Judge Giles, without the aid or procurement of Mr. Judson, and without the presence of counsel familiar with this elaborate and involved controversy; and that the decision rendered upon this case proves no more than that Mr. Day beat Mr. Stellman upon the case thus made, and the argument presented on it. Mr. Judson asserts further that his rights are the subject of a suit directly against Day and will be determined in that suit. In my letter I simply stated that, as Mr. Judson's counsel, I knew nothing of the case made before Judge Giles, and was ignorant that there was to be a final hearing, and that Mr. Judson had, upon due consideration and advice, decided to take no part in the controversy at Baltimore.

The effect intended to be produced by this letter of Mr. Judson was to guard merchants and others against the false impression that his rights had been settled, and to notify all persons interested that he was in the due course of a suit asserting his title, and that, when established, he would hold all persons liable who infringed it.

In reply, five long columns of it are produced, which, so far as I see, do not deny any statement made, except that which relates to the final hearing, although some arguments are used to cast doubt upon their truth. The single question is, whether Mr. Judson's title is settled by this Baltimore proceeding? He was not a party to the suit; he never saw the parties to it; he never saw their lawyer but once, for a few minutes; he did not know what the case was which was to be made; but he does know, as I know, that he is in possession of much stronger proof to sustain his title than has yet been produced in any of these controversies. Under these circumstances, Mr. Day and his lawyers insist that Mr. Judson's title is settled: I insist that no man's rights can be settled, unless he is a party to the suit, and is allowed to prove his case and be heard in it. Lawyers know how absurd the proposition is that any man can be judged without a hearing; and laymen can easily see how unjust it would be. One reflection, however, must strike all minds with force—that Day's case must be a very desperate one, when the best proof of its validity lies in the fact that he has beaten some stranger to the title, upon a consented hearing, although he was beaten on the same question when Mr. Judson defended the parties.

Much stress is laid upon the fact that this Baltimore suit ended in a "final hearing," and Mr. C. A. Seward is selected to contradict Mr. Judson in this particular. In his letter he assumes to restate Mr. Judson's letter in this language:

"It is further alleged—

"1. That this—i. e., the Baltimore hearing—was not a final hearing."

Now, Sir, Mr. Judson made no such allegation in his letter. Here are his words:

"The facts of the case are as follows:

"1. This was not a 'final hearing,' except by the consent of some strangers to me, who have no interest whatever in the title, and whose consent is just as valuable to affect my rights as the consent of Day is that they shall be affected."

When so plain a statement as that of Mr. Judson can be so perverted in the face of the world, what are we to expect when statements are made whose truth is more difficult to ascertain?

Mr. Seward then says:

First—"That this was a final hearing, not by consent, but upon pleadings and proofs." This averment admits of no misconstruction. It is either true or false to the knowledge of Mr. Seward and his party—they were there, and cannot be deceived. Mr. Seward is a lawyer, and knows what a "final hearing" is, and whether it is one "by consent" or "upon the pleadings and proofs." He clearly recognizes this distinction, and plainly avers that this hearing was "not by consent," but was "upon the pleadings and proofs."

What this distinction means I will explain, in order that the public may appreciate the value of statements resorted to in this case.

When a plaintiff thinks himself injured, he may file his bill, and give the defendant notice of a motion to be made in Court for injunction. The defendant may either oppose that motion or permit it to go by default, as the Baltimore defeudants did. If he choose the latter course, he may file his answer, and serve it upon the complainant with a notice of motion to dissolve the injunction, which motion the Court is bound to hear. This was the motion which I supposed Mr. Marshall was about to make: and, as any lawyer knows, it would have been the proper one to make, if the defendants intended to avail themselves of all legal defences. Day knows it well, for upon such a motion "The New England Car-Spring Company" dissolved a conditional injunction against them which he had induced Judge Betts to grant upon the Chaffee patent, when he set up his false claim to it, and filled the newspapers, as now, with his advertisement of that opinion in his favor. After the filing of the answer the parties proceed to take "proofs" for a "final hearing," and to take those "proofs" the rules give three months. Witnesses are called, examined and cross-examined, in the presence of both parties; irrelevant testimony is objected to, and the truth is sifted out by the most trying process known to the human intellect. When both sides have closed their proofs, the case goes to "final hearing," and this is the only proceeding known to the law "as a final hearing upon the pleading and proofs." If the reader of this has any doubt about the correctness of this statement, ask any lawyer, except Mr. Seward—and Mr. Seward in any case except this.

But a "final hearing by consent" may be anything you please. Parties to a litigation may consent to go to final hearing upon the pleadings, and a copy of a "Scotch Dictionary," if they think fit. The case is in their own possession, and if the defendant consents that he has no defense, the Court will so decree; but that cannot affect any one but the parties to it.

With this explanation, the question recurs whether the Baltimore hearing was, as Mr. Judson avers, a final hearing only by the consent of parties not interested in the title; or whether it was, as Mr. Seward avers, "a final hearing not by consent but upon pleadings and proofs." The only evidence I have upon the subject, except a letter from Mr. Marshall, dated July 22, is what the public have, and that sustains Mr. Judson, if the witnesses are credible. Judge Giles, in his opinion, thus states the manner in which the case was heard: "Two agreements have been filed in this cause—one setting the cause down for final hearing and arranging the terms of a decree, if the Court should decide in favor of the complainants, so as to dispense with the trouble and delay of taking an account; and the other in reference to the testimony on which the case has been heard. So that the cause has been heard under these agreements on final hearing, and is now before the Court for final decree."

If there could be any doubt whether the Judge or Mr. Seward told the truth, that would be dispelled by Mr. Latrobe's letter, which precedes Mr. Seward's, on the same page. He thus states it: "Mr. Marshall, acting for all the parties sued, it was agreed, with a view of obtaining, at the earliest day, and with the least expense, the decision of the Supreme Court, (U. S.,) to set the case down for final hearing upon bill, answer, and the testimony that had been before Judge Ingersoll on the motion for preliminary injunction. With this view certified copies of all the New-York affidavits were procured, additional testimony on both sides was let in, and with the whole mass of documentary evidence, the case was argued before Judge Giles."

Having thus presented both sides of the question, I submit that Mr. Seward's bold assertion that this was "a final hearing, not by consent, but upon pleadings and proofs," although it may excite the admiration of those who believe that the truth modestly asserted is no better than its contrary persistently advanced, must be considered demolished. This letter of Mr. Latrobe, by the way, lets in another flood of light upon this transaction. It says, "Additional testimony on both sides was let in"—that is, affidavits in addition to those used in New-York were read by Day. What these were neither Mr. Judson nor his counsel have ever heard to this hour, and, of course, cannot infer how they affected the case, but we are at liberty to hope—Mr. Day and his counsel to the contrary, notwithstanding—that the Courts, when they come to adjudicate Mr. Judson's rights, will afford him an opportunity to cross-examine these affidavit-makers, and find out what it is which makes it desirable for Day to try his cause in Baltimore on a consented case, where Mr. Judson is not a defendant.

It may be asked why Mr. Stellman and others made so unnecessary a consent as that upon which they tried the case? The answer is obvious enough—they had not entered in the matter which made it of any consequence to them how the case was tried. The whole extent of their profits probably on selling the small quantities of elastic goods a year would not pay the costs of one trial, and Mr. Day could easily arrange matters so as to make it more desirable for them to submit to his terms than to fight. His object was not to injure them, but indirectly to affect Mr. Judson, as is now manifest from the fact that we hear nothing about the real defendants, but only know Mr. Judson is defeated.

Mr. Judson stated that he had no connection with the suit, except to furnish on request some papers. This is not denied directly; but Mr. Seward insinuates that he had some private communication with Mr. Marshall about this case, which, if his sense of honor would permit him to publish, would contradict this averment. The impression which I derived from the few minutes' interview I had with Mr. Marshall is such, that I cannot believe it possible he ever said anything about this case to Mr. Seward but the truth, and I know the truth to be as Mr. Judson stated it. Mr. Seward, however, resorts to a common device to slander Mr. Judson, but is caught in his own trap. He clothes his slander in this language: "Were I not for a rule of professional courtesy, I should allude to what was said to me by Mr. Marshall upon this point; but I cannot, without consultation with him, repeat what he said; but I am at liberty to state that Mr. Judson's assertion, that he had no connection with the Baltimore cases, would be much strengthened if he would produce from Mr. Marshall a statement to that effect."

The English of which is, that Mr. Judson published an untruth, well known to be so to Mr. Marshall, who had privately exposed the facts to his opponent, Mr. Seward; but that from matters of delicacy—somewhat like those which actuated Mrs. Stiggins, who, from motives of delicacy, always kept her gin in a tea pot—the aforesaid Mr. Seward would not expose Mr. Judson. Unfortunately, however, for Mr. Seward, I have the very certificate of Mr. Marshall which he calls for, in the shape of a letter written to me July 22, before this opinion was published, and before any expectation existed that these issues would be raised, in answer to an inquiry addressed by me to him, whether it was true that a final hearing had been agreed to in these cases. After explaining the reasons why his clients made this consent, (and they are very good ones for them,) Mr. Marshall adds: "As for the form in which the case came up, if you did not know it, it was no fault of mine, nor am I aware that Mr Judson has undertaken anything in connection with this case beyond furnishing me with some few papers I used. I am unable to see that his case is at all prejudiced, further than the other side may claim the decree as giving moral weight to their cause." And further, after stating the measures we have taken in vain to induce Mr. Judson to assume this defence for the defendants, Mr. Marshall adds, "So you will perceive that Mr. J. has no connection with the case further than the interest he had in setting up his title." This letter was written to inform me of the true state of the case—Mr. Marshall assuming, as the truth was, that I was ignorant of it—and it never was expected to serve the purpose to which it is now so admirably adapted; but I have noticed that frequently these Day gentlemen call for proof they do not expect to get, and find themselves suddenly confronted by what they have supposed not to exist. The truth is mighty and will prevail.

As to the attack upon me for the few remarks upon the case in my short letter, I have this to reply: When I read the opinion and found no mention made of important documents, but their existence virtually ignored, I inferred that the Judge did not see them. It was only an inference, and not a statement of fact, and like all other inferences it may be erroneous. One of the facts from which I drew the inference is this: Judge Giles says in his opinion—"If not then perfectly clear that so far as the acts of Goodyear were concerned, in none of those acts is there any indication that he meant, when he used the general term 'shirred or corrugated goods,' in the contracts of 1846 to limit them to the articles made under the patent of March 9, 1844? On the contrary, is there not everything to convince the Court that he meant to include all kinds of shirred or corrugated goods?"

But by referring to "the contracts of 1846," which are thus broadly asserted not to have been designed to restrict the rights of Day to shirred goods, "made under the patent of March 9, 1844," it will be found that, in plain English words, his rights are expressly so restricted. These contracts are in five parts—all constituting one agreement. The last one is dated Dec. 5, 1846, and it is the one in which Day swore, in his answer in New-Jersey, was designed to express the true meaning of all the others, in order to be placed on record, and thus give notice to the public of his rights. This contract is Goodyear's grant, either alone or in connection with those which precede it, and it thus reads:

Now this Indenture witnesseth, That for and in consideration of the sum of five thousand dollars, to me in hand paid by said Horace H. Day, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and the said Day forever released from the same; and in consideration of the conditions hereinafter contained, by said Day to be performed, I have assigned, sold and set over, and do hereby assign, sell and set over, to the said Horace H. Day, his executors, administrators and assigns, the sole and exclusive right, license, and privilege for the whole of the United States, to use the machinery in said above-recited patents described, and to make and vend the shirred or corrugated goods in said patents mentioned, and to use in the preparation thereof, and also in the preparation and manufacture of India-rubber hose, patent boots, Griffith's patent cotton-floaters, and Day's patent chairs and settees, the compounds and fabrics in said letters patent described, for and during the term of said letters patent, and of all renewals and extensions thereof.

Placed in parallel columns, the contract, and the Judge's opinion of it, present the following striking contrast:

Judge Giles' Opinion.	Goodyear's Grant to Day.
Is it not then perfectly clear that, so far as the acts of Goodyear were concerned, in none of those acts is there any indication that he meant, when he used the general term "shirred or corrugated goods," in the contracts of 1846 to limit them to the articles made under the patent of March 9, 1844? On the contrary, is there not everything to convince the Court that he meant to include all kinds of shirred or corrugated goods?	Now this indenture witnesseth, That for and in consideration of the sum of five thousand dollars, to me in hand paid by said Horace H. Day, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and the said Day forever released from the same; and in consideration of the conditions hereinafter contained, by said Day to be performed, I have assigned sold and set over, and do hereby assign, sell and set over, to the said Horace H. Day, his executors, administrators and assigns, the sole and exclusive right, license and privilege, for the whole of the United States, to use the machinery in the said above recited patents described, and to make and vend the shirred or corrugated goods in said patents mentioned, and to use in the preparation thereof, and also in the preparation and manufacture of India-rubber hose, patent boots, Griffith's patent cotton-floaters, and Day's patent chairs and settees, the compound and fabrics in said letters Patent described, for and during the term of said Letters Patent, and of all renewals and extensions thereof.

The Judge does not mention this particular part of the agreements in his opinion, and I think it was a fair inference to deduce from this omission that he never had read it. If he did read it, then his interrogatories, which are meant by him to be answered affirmatively, admit of nothing but a negative.

As to the attempt to excite a feeling between Mr. Marshall and myself about this case I think that will fail. I have no doubt that he argued his case much better than I could have done it, and it gives me pleasure to see him so highly praised by his opponents. If he had beaten them he would not have been—at least I so infer from the fact that I never have seen myself or the other counsel who have, from time to time, beaten Mr. Day—praised at all. Nor would I deprive these various letter-writers of the mutual happiness that their mutual admiration seems to excite. Mr. Day's share of this sort of enjoyment must be immense, as he is flattered to the top of his bent by all the rest, and in turn compliments them all. Any success by that side of this controversy, however trifling, or however gained, must be such a relief to the dreary prospect, and still more dreary retrospect, that a little newspaper mutual admiration ought to be excused, and the man who would unfeelingly dampen their enjoyment, I think is cruel—I would not on any account.

In conclusion, and by way of answer to the constant swagger which is maintained by Mr. Day and his followers about his bold defence of his rights, &c., allow me to republish a passage from the opinion of that very able lawyer, the Hon. Joseph Holt, late Commissioner of Patents and now Postmaster-General, who extended the Goodyear patent. Day is the person to whom he alludes, and his delineation is unmistakable:

"Another and most potent reason why this patent should be extended is found in the acknowledged fact that the public have not kept the faith which they plighted with the applicant, when he covenanted to surrender to them a product which was in effect the concentrated essence of the physical and intellectual energies of his entire life. That public stipulated with him that he should peacefully enjoy for fourteen years the monopoly created by his patent, and, had he been permitted to do so, he would no doubt long since have realized an ample remuneration; but, so far from this having been the case, no inventor probably has ever been so harassed, so trampled upon, so plundered by that sordid and licentious class of infringers known in the parlance of the world, with no exaggeration of phrase, as 'pirates.'

"The spoliations of their incessant guerrilla warfare upon his defenceless rights have unquestionably amounted to millions.

"In the very front rank of this predatory band stands one who sustains in this case the double and most convenient character of contestant and witness, and it is but a subdued expression of my estimate of the deposition he has lodged, to say that this Parthian shaft—the last that he could hurl at an invention which he has so long and remorselessly pursued—is a fitting finale to that career which the public justice of this country has so signally rebuked."

Very truly yours,

EDWARD N. DICKERSON.

THURSDAY, Aug. 11—P. M.

There was some firmness shown on the early call of the list at the Stock Exchange this evening, and prices improved ⅜ for New-York Central; ½ ℔ cent. for Panama; 1 ℔ cent. for Pacific Mail; ⅜ for Tennessee sixes; ¾ for Toledo, and the full rates of yesterday afternoon for the other Western Shares. There was a good demand for Missouri sixes at last quotation, and some considerable sales of New-York and Brooklyn City Securities at par. Reading was active at 43½, cash, and buyer 60 days, and Illinois Central Bonds, 84, seller 60 days. The feeling on the Street, after the adjournment, relapsed into a regular Summer dullness again, and at the Second Board the transactions were quite light, and one or two of the Road shares, such as Reading, Michigan Central and Toledo, fell off a fraction. New-York Central closed 69½, ex-dividend, and Panama 115, while realizations on Pacific Mail, at the rapid rise of yesterday, caused the stock to react to 77½ after selling at 79 in the morning. There is no confirmation of any one of the various surmises as to the settlement of competition; the most that is positively known is that some new arrangement on the Atlantic side must take place on the 1st of October, and that while the Pacific and Panama interests have not been unmindful of this in securing the Collins steamers, some of the other steamship interests, it is believed, are not opposed to making this change the occasion for a new treaty of alliance and consolidation. The interest of Mr. ROBERTS is said to be one of the elements likely to enter into the negotiation. Mr. GARRISON is also in town, from San Francisco, and Mr. VANDERBILT, himself, returned from the Springs last evening. The general market this afternoon left off dull, but with no large offers to sell stocks for the decline.

The market for Money on short engagements is now pretty much in the control of the Banks; they are discounting 60@90 day bills, giving the preference to the shortest, at 7 ℔ cent. and below this we hear of no transactions in paper. The longer dates, of strictly prime indorsed bills, go at 7½@9 ℔ cent., 3@6 months, and fair bills at 9@10 ℔ cent. Demand loans, on first-class Stock collateral, are 6@7 ℔ cent, and on pledge of Bills Receivable 7 ℔ cent. These terms being established this week at last, the market appears to work with ease to nearly all regular dealers at Bank. The Importers and Domestic Commission houses who desire to anticipate their long bills, grumble at the advanced outside rates and their offerings are by no means of a pressing character. The Customs continue light; only $72,000 to-day. Other Sub-Treasury receipts $172,000; payments, $286,000; balance, $5,327,161. Nothing new in Exchange. To-morrow, the remittances will be made up for the steamers on Saturday.

Total Debt, all told	13.000 000
Total Cost	$25,000,000

* Including Mortgage Coupons to March, 1860.

We reproduce the figures of the above plan of consolidation—which, by the way, meets with much favor wherever discussed—to explain to the Fourth Mortgage Bond Holder whose note appeared in our last, that he is not asked to scale the principal of his claim, as others less fortunately situated are, but simply to cooperate in some prompt and feasible plan to secure the regular payment of his interest as well. It is submitted that a prolonged Receivership and a general scramble in law would not be conducive to that or any other really profitable end.

We give below the Cleveland and Toledo earnings since the annual report to June 1:

1859.		1858.
June	$53,400	June	$57,293
July	45,900	July	52,565
First 6 ds. August	12,170	First 6 ds. August	12,540

The accounts from the road, we are informed, "are favorable. There was an increase of freight the first week of August over last year of $1,237, and an additional freight train has just been put on. The road is in good order, and so is the rolling stock, which is ample for a heavy Winter business. The crops along the line are excellent, as well as along the extensive tributaries to it. It is believed by the managers that the dawn of prosperity is again opening."

We learn from Logansport that the track of the Toledo, Logansport and Burlington Railroad will all be graded and ready for the iron by the 15th September. About 4,500 tons of their iron has already been received from England and shipped westward, and they have bills of lading for the balance necessary to finish their road which the Directors say will be open for business in October without fail.

The earnings of the Michigan Central Road for the month of June are:

	1859.	1858.
Passengers	$62,118 62	$82 448 20
Freight	40,692 47	55,233 77
Miscellaneous	5,492 85	6,150 48
Total	$108,303 94	$143,872 45
Decrease	$35 568 51

The telegraphic report of the July receipts of the Rock Island Road is $65,700, which, upon settlement, will probably be $69,000 or $70,000, against $82,000 in July, 1858.

The earnings of the Michigan Southern and Northern Indiana Railroad for July, were:

	1858.	1859.

The Bank of Louisiana has declared a semi-annual dividend of 5 per cent. and an extra dividend of 5 per cent., both payable to the New-York stockholders, at the Merchants' Bank, on the 5th of September, less the charges for exchange.

By the North Star, from Aspinwall, we have the California mails to July 20. The San Francisco Bulletin, of that date, contains the following reference to money and stock movements:

"The money market may be said to be easier than at the date of our last steamer reference, yet there is a good requirement for funds. On good stock and other collaterals there is no difficulty in obtaining accommodation, but on paper the facilities are limited. We quote at 2@2½ ℔ cent. on collateral. Little doing in real estate securities, and rates unchanged. Sight exchange on the East continues at 2 ℔ cent. premium. The supply of Gold Bars is but moderate, and there is a good demand at 880 par. The operations in the United States Branch Mint in this city from 1st to 16th instant, inclusive, were: Deposits, $46 280, coinage, $935,000. The exports of treasure, since June 30, were $2,262,134 47. The imports of treasure have been $9 037. In Stocks there has been but little of note occurring, with the exception of some transactions in California Steam Navigation, and an advance in our City Sixes of '58, since the payment of the July interest. The California Steam Navigation Company have declared a stock dividend of 10¼ ℔ cent., being the balance of unissued stock. This is equivalent, at present market rates, to a 4½ ℔ cent. dividend on the par value of the stock, in cash. The capital stock of $2,500.000 may now be considered subscribed and paid for."

The Niagara Fire Insurance Company has declared a semi-annual dividend of ten (10) ℔ cent., payable on demand.
